He has been in the drug business at Elkton, Ky., for twelve years; has sold hundreds of bottles of this remedy and nearly all other cough medicines manufactured, which shows conclusively that Chamberlain's is the most satisfactory to the people, and is the best. The road is splendidly equipped with fast trains, the coaches are all furnished with the latest improvements and it is a pleasure to ride with these people. They employ none but sober, industrious men who constantly look after the comfort and safety of the traveling public. College Athletics.

A distinguished writer in a pamphlet published by the Interscholastic Athletic Association, says that an immense improvement in the moral and physical status of college graduates has taken place since the introduction of athletic games in colleges. There is no reason why "brain and brawn" should be antagonistic. In support of this last proposition the action of that general invigorant, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which in strengthening the body increases mental activity, may be authoritatively cited. This famous medicine overcomes the dyspepsia peculiar to persons of sedentary inactive habits, and yields sound refreshing sleep. It also remedies liver complaint, constipation, malaria, rheumatism, nervousness and kidney trouble.

HE FORGAVE HER.

The first remembrance I have of my mother must have been when I was about 3 years old.

Of my father nothing is clear. Indeed I do not remember ever having one until I was led into the great drawing room one day and lifted up to gaze on "my father," they said.

When I became old enough to understand, I learned much from my old nurse. She told me my mother was a child when her parents gave her to my father, who was many years older than she. But he was immensely rich and loved the child, and so they were well pleased when General Neville took their daughter.

I was never separated from her for one day until I was 18. I was sent to college. It was a severe trial for me to leave her—mother, friend, companion, all, to me.

Returning home at the close of the second year, I found things a little different. Indeed no lady in the neighborhood entertained so much company as my mother. She said to me:

"My dear Mary, now that you are about entering society it is necessary that I should secure the best friends for you."

But among her guests was one I fancied my mother was a little more attentive to—a very handsome lawyer—and I felt perfectly sure he admired her very much.

Again was vacation near, when I received a letter from my mother which not only surprised me dreadfully, but completely put to flight any ideas of objecting, remonstrating or pleading against what had been a dream during the last year, for it was then a reality.

DEAR MARY—Believing the time will come when you will think with me, that a bad promise had better be broken than kept, I take some comfort in the regret I feel in giving you sorrow over for a little while. This morning I was married to one you have met. Be perfectly sure that when your mother gave her heart to the one whose wife she is her love for her boy was not invaded.

We are going for a little trip, probably shall be absent two months. My husband's sister—your maiden aunt—will help your grandma to make time pass happily until our return.

Yes, it was the man I feared. In a storm of rage and disappointment I strode up and down the floor.

After a few days I grew calmer and decided to return home, wait there my mother's coming, settle up my business and then commence my travels.

I entered the drawing room, drew a chair to the window and seated myself in a position to command the road and see my grandmother when she would be coming home, which would be soon, the servant said.

I had watched possibly half an hour when I beheld some distance off and coming at an almost flying rate a female on horseback. As she came nearer I beheld the most beautiful girl I had ever seen. On she came, up to the gate and over without seeming aware that such an obstacle had been in her way.

I drew back into the recess of the window as she entered the drawing room. Tossing off her hat, she sank on the sofa, saying:

"Dear me, it is awfully dull out here! I wonder when that young one is coming. It is no use to go around the truth. I was in love at first sight. I made a little noise with the chair and advanced into the room."

A half suppressed scream fell on my ear, and then she seemed about to fly, when I explained to her who I was.

With a beautiful smile she held out her hand and said:

"I feel as if I knew you very well. From your mother and grandmother I have heard so much of you. It is too bad you should have found no one here."

"I am very well reconciled now to that," I said. "You know my mother. When you are a friend of hers and visiting here, I hope."

"Yes, I am staying with your grandmother and—"

"My aunt," I said, finishing her reply. "Are you acquainted with that worthy lady, my mother's maiden sister?" I asked.

"Slightly. I met her this week," she returned, with a smile.

Soon my grandmother came and formally presented me to my young friend, Miss Bell.

During the evening grandmother informed me I should not be annoyed with the society of Miss Moreton—that was the maiden aunt's name—for several days, as she had gone to make a little visit in the neighborhood that day, and it was probable she would not present herself perhaps for a week. How I rejoiced!

One morning, entering the breakfast room, I beheld the long dreaded person, I felt sure, seated with her back to me, the very picture of my imagination—my maiden aunt.

No chance of another day's happiness then! She should always be crying about and coming in just when I wished her in the moon.

My grandmother arose to present me. I dared not raise my eyes. The introduction through, Miss Moreton said:

"I was dreadful sorry I was not home to welcome you."

There was something in the voice that caused me to look up. I looked again.

A ringing laugh, followed by a very low one from grandma, a chuckle from the servant, and by the removal of the cap, spectacles and false front hair, and I was soon convinced that I had been the object of an excellent joke.

"Your maiden aunt, young man—Miss Annabel Moreton!"

All I answered I will not write here. And she, as it was "against her principles to disappoint any one," made me happy. Soon my mother returned.

During the evening of her return I noticed she watched Annie very closely, and then she came, and, putting her arms around me, whispered:

"You can forgive me now, Mary,"—Exchange.

Breaking It Real Gently.

There is a man in congress who is renowned in the city he comes from for his imperturbable calmness on every imaginable occasion. They tell of him that one day he strolled leisurely into the office of a friend.

"I have just had a chat with your wife," he said by way of beginning.

"Why, I didn't know she was down town," said the friend.

"Oh, she wasn't down town," replied the congressman. "I called at the house."

"I didn't know she was receiving today," said the husband, with some surprise.

"I thought she had a headache," said the congressman. "There was a crowd at the house."

"A crowd?" echoed the husband.

"Yes, I went on the calm man. 'They came with the engine.'"

"The engine?" gasped the husband.

"Oh, it's all right," went on the calm man. "It's all out now. It wasn't much of a fire, but I thought you'd like to know it."—Washington Post.

An Allday.

This is to certify that on May 11th, I walked to Melick's drug store on a pair of crutches and bought a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm; for infamatory rheumatism which had crippled me up. After using three bottles I am completely cured. I can cheerfully recommend it.—Charles H. Wetzel, Sunbury, Pa.

Robbed the Grave.

A startling incident of which Mr John Oliver, of Philadelphia, was the subject, is narrated by him as follows: "I was in a most dreadful condition. My skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken, tongue coated, pain continually in back and sides, no appetite—gradually growing weaker day by day. Three physicians had given me up. Fortunately, a friend advised trying 'Electric Bitters' and to my great joy and surprise the first bottle made a decided improvement. I continued their use for three weeks, and am now a well man. I know they saved my life, and robbed the grave of another victim." No one should fail to try them. Only 50 cents per bottle at Wilkins & Linn.
