THAT SPANISH WOMAN

A Painting and a Ghost All in One Frame.

I first heard of it just after our marriage. He came home—it was he then—raving in terms of art concerning the picture.

"Why didn't you buy it?" I asked.

"I offered old Doughty $500, and he jeered."

I gasped as much as Doughty jeered—$500 was a awful sum then.

Five years after old Doughty died, and my husband went to a sale of his pictures and things. He came back gloomy. He told me that young Doughty was there, and he could not bid against him. They made an arrangement. The artist's son was to bid up to $150, and the husband to what amount he pleased. It went for $37.50.

Lately young Doughty went bankrupt—ignorance of bookkeeping was his explanation to the creditors. My husband went to the warehouse again. He asked young Doughty to dinner and said he meant to buy the picture. The young artist raised his paint stained hands in horror.

"It's accursed! It has the evil eye! The girl nor bought it for $250 and worshipped it. Whenever he was rich, people tempted him with splendid offers, and when he was poor he couldn't sell it. He once pawned it for $15. The best thing has ruined me. I've been offered $1,000 for it—when I was flush."

"And refused?"

"Yes. Worse luck! Last year, when I'd sold my academy picture, a rich Australian came to the studio. He was just about to buy 'The Gem' for $3,000—'The Gem' is an old salon 10 foot—when he saw 'The Garrido,' and said, 'Who painted that ugly thing?'"

"Oh, it's nothing," I replied, but he went and gazed and fell victim to the ugly Spanish woman and offered $1,002.

"I was firm; he got angry and stalked out of the place. 'The Gem' will be in the sale, but don't buy 'The Garrido,' it'll bring bad luck."

My husband went to the sale and brought back the picture in a cab. He paid only $35.

I looked with great curiosity at the work of art, undoubtedly a superb piece of painting. It represented a young Spanish woman, full face, with a passionate, scowling countenance, eyes that followed you about the room, and black hair which somehow stood out against a black ground. She was an ugly woman and yet fascinating.

We hung the picture over the mantel-piece in the dining room and raved about it during dinner, and came back a dozen times after dinner to gaze at it. The husband even stopped tying trout casts to visit "the Spanish woman."

"Luck!" he said. "Hang luck!" And he stuck a peacock feather in the frame.

It may have been mere coincidence, but there came unexpectedly a slump in the husband's work. He got "broken" in the first Thames trout he ever hooked. A plate of soup was spilled over my best new frock, the moths got into my fur, the parlormaid caught the measles and the dog distemper. All these trifles were within a month, but we were resolute, placid and philosophic.

A friend, hearing us talk, and, admiring the picture, offered us $250. We jeered. He left for Joricho.

One night I heard a strange noise in the flat. I did not awaken the husband; he has theories about not attacking burglars, but is very hotheaded. I crept down to the dining room. There was a noise inside. I burst open the door, saying all in my breath: "You'd better go quickly and leave everything. I've rung the call for police, boy messenger, cab, doctor and fire escape. You've just time to get away." A cat, a mere, harmless cat, bolted past me.

I went to close the window. The blind was up and the moon streamed in. I glanced to look at the Spanish woman; she was looking at me, staring, glaring. I gasped, then walked bravely toward her a step or two. The eyes were opened wider than usual and there was a fierce light in them.

My mouth grew dry; I tried to scream; my tongue merely clattered. In a moment all the ghost stories I had ever read passed through my mind.

A subdued storm of words rushed from the thick lips, and teeth gleamed within them. The language was foreign; the voice was like that of Bernhard when she curses in a whisper. The head advanced, fure in the face, mad glare in the eyes. The frame became a kind of black mist.

Nearer, nearer; I could feel her breath. I thanked God silently that she had no arms, and put up my trembling hands to keep her off.

Suddenly strength came to my legs. I rushed across the room, stumbled over a chair and fell. The head turned. I could see coarse black curls on the nape of her neck as it turned. Closer it came, closer, but slowly. Only a foot or two separated the face from mine, and I was paralyzed.

Closer—only an inch off, when all at once my muscles awoke, and I fled from the room, hanging the door.

I said nothing at breakfast to my husband about the matter; he is very sympathetic, but somewhat skeptical and quizzical.

At 11 a. m. the housemaid and I took down the picture—at least I looked on and she took it down. There seemed nothing abnormal about it.

Then we put it into a cab. The dealer refused to give more than $25 for it.

Hitherto he and I have never had a quarrel. I suppose that such a garden of Eden state of affairs could not last forever.—Sketch.

A Good Play.

The thing that seems most interesting after seeing the first act of a good play is the ingenious and interesting way in which the story has been told to us. We have been introduced to all, or nearly all, the characters; we have learned their names and relations to each other; we have seen something of the motives that underlie their actions, and we see that their actions have led to a most interesting point in the story. We are eager to learn more, we want to see what is to become of the people. Will they get out of their troubles? Will the lovers be united, the good rewarded and the wicked punished as they deserve? We have had a problem in human conduct presented to us, and we look forward with pleasure to its solution.—Vernon's Magazine.

Fear in High Places.

A famous steely climber was asked if he ever felt fear in his business.

"Of course I feel fear at times," he answered. "Fear is common to all mankind. Not to feel fear is not courage. To overcome fear is the true quality of courage. I divide the nerve force of a man into two parts—the impelling force and the restraining force—the same impelling force that causes a body of recruits at first to run under fire and the restraining force that causes them to overcome for various reasons the first natural fear. So, in climbing, one unused to it is by the natural impelling force of his nervous system afraid, afraid that his legs, his arms, his support, will give way and plunge him down. Shakespeare, who touched on all human emotions, touched on this feeling of fear in high places when in 'King Lear' he pictured Edward at the cliffs of Dover.

"The one way to get over the natural fear is by some restraining force from either within or without. I remember once when a new boy at sea was ordered aloft by the mate he trembled with fear and begged to be let out of it. 'Upon my soul, sir, I can't go up there.' This was his first impelling impulse. But when the mate touched him up with a rope's end he was at the top of the mast so quick that the mate could not follow him. The pain on his outer nerves brought him to his senses and made him exert his restraining force. So if you happen to be with any one who shows signs of fear in a high place a few smart slaps on the face will bring him to himself. The right medicine for unconquerable fear in a high place is immediate pain on the outside nerves."—Boston Transcript.

An Iron Czar.

In the "Memoirs of a Revolutionary," by I. Kropotkin, the author says that Alexander II himself, for all he was willing to emancipate the serfs, was a man capable of singular harshness and even brutality. When Kropotkin was promoted and was called with other officers to the side of the czar, the latter congratulated them quietly, speaking about military duty and loyalty. "But if any of you," he went on, distinctly shouting out every word, his face suddenly contorted with anger—"but if any of you—which God preserve you from—should under any circumstances prove disloyal to the czar, the throne and the fatherland, take heed of what I say, he will be treated with all the severity of the laws, without the slightest consideration."

"His voice failed," says the author. "His face was peevish, full of that rage which I saw in my childhood on the faces of landlords when they threatened to skin their serfs 'under the rods.' He violently spurred his horse and rode out of our circle. Next morning, the 14th of June, by his orders, three officers were shot at Modlin, in Poland, and one soldier, Szur by name, was killed under the rods."

Swept Away by Plagues.

Italy once had a plague that killed 10,000 persons daily. Five hundred a day died in Rome. In one year 200,000 citizens of Constantinople died. The epidemic of 1347 was the worst ever visited on man. In Asia 23,000,000 perished by it and in Europe 25,000,000. In London 200 persons were buried daily in the Charterhouse yards. It was called "black death." The plague in England in 1471 destroyed more people than the continual wars for the 15 preceding years.

"Sweating sickness," prevailing in England for three years, killed half the population of all the capital towns and depopulated Oxford. It was mortal in three hours. The great plague of London in 1604 carried off 100,000 people. A transport with soldiers on board, from Sardinia to Naples, brought a plague that destroyed 400,000. An epidemic started in Marseilles by a ship from the Levant killed over 60,000.

Clever Advertiser.

A clever advertising scheme was employed by a firm in a southern city. The junior partner of the firm swore out a warrant for the arrest of the senior partner on the ground that he was selling goods below cost and that the firm was constantly losing money thereby.

The case came up in court, and the counsel for the senior partner asked for a postponement in order to have more time to prepare his case. The judge granted the request, bail was fixed and the senior member released. As he left the courtroom the junior partner arose and exclaimed, "If he is released, the sacrifice will go on!"

The news soon spread, and the firm did a better business.

When the case was again called, no plaintiff appeared, and the charge was dismissed. The firm had succeeded in their object—advertisement.

He Fired.

During the siege of Pueblo by Santa Anna, Captain Kendrick of the artillery, later professor at West Point, was in command at Fort Loreto, overlooking the city, when Colonel Childs, the commander of the American forces stationed in that vicinity and who was an excitable man, rode at a mad gallop into the fort and cried: "Fire at once! The crisis is coming!" The battery opened fire, and amid the smoke and roar of the cannon an officer, seeing no enemy, asked Kendrick what he was firing at. He calmly replied, "At the crisis."

His Paper's Motto.

"I've got a good motto for my new paper."

"What is it?"

"What we have to hold."

"Oh, I see; referring to the circulation. That's good. But by the way, I didn't know you were a publisher."

"I'm not. This is a patent fly paper."

—Philadelphia Press.

Even Scott Weakens

Even the Oregonian is beginning to weaken on the expansion policy of the administration which is to hold the Philippines and other possessions as colonies, after the most approved fashions. The Oregonian says:

And if they are to have their own way about the tariff, they may as well succeed. We have little business in the Philippines any longer now, unless it is to be a paying investment. The question as to whether we should retreat under fire has been settled in the negative. The question what we shall do now is not one of national honor, but of expediency. Whether we should stay in the islands depends on what we are going to do with them. If we are going to encourage trade between them and our home ports, open our markets to them and their markets to us, well and good. Then there is a great future for us on the Pacific ocean. But if the profits of trade are to be cut off by prohibitive tariffs we do not want the islands. Is this Spain or the United States? Is this the seventeenth century or nineteenth? Are we going to treat Porto Rico and the Philippines and promise to treat Cuba as our own colony to be disposed of or province to be added and built up? If we are going to deal worse with these new islands than Spain dealt with them, it will be money in our pockets and later on our names to get rid of them.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescription from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

Sold by druggists, price 75c per bottle. Hall's Family Pills are the best.

Strange Prophecies.

Clement V and Philip IV procured the condemnation of Molay, the grand master of the Templars, to the stake. As he was led to execution Molay cited his persecutors to appear before God's throne, the king within 40 weeks and the pope within 40 days. Within those respective times both died. Rienzi, the last of the tribunes, condemned to death from Mortale. When he had pronounced the sentence, the culprit summoned the judge to meet death himself within the month, and within the month Rienzi was assassinated.

In 1575 Nanning Koppesoon, a Roman Catholic, tortured to death during the religious strife in the Netherlands, recanted his extorted confession when on the way to the scaffold. A clergyman, Julian Epezzoon, tried to drown his voice by clamorous prayer. The victim summoned him to meet him within three days at the bar of God, and Epezzoon went home and died within that time. While at the stake Wishart openly denounced Cardinal Beaton: "He shall be brought low, even to the ground, before the trees which have supplied these fagots have shed their leaves." The trees were but in the bravery of their May foliage when the bleeding body of the cardinal was hung by his murderers over the battlements of St. Andrews.—Chambers' Journal.

The Butterfly's Pocket.

The male butterflies have the proud privilege of a pocket, but the pocket of a butterfly is wonderfully made. It is really an extension of the under wing folded back on the upper side, but it is exquisitely colored and marked like the upper side, so that it is very hard to detect, and no one has yet discovered just how it is opened, although undoubtedly the butterfly can throw it open while he is flying.

At first glance there seems to be only white or amber colored silk floss within, but examine this with a microscope and you will find twisted ribbons, slender rods shaped like a shepherd's crook, others jointed bamboo-like and flexible rods and tiny scales of various sorts and patterns.

It is known that insects have a marvellously keen scent, and it is believed that all these odd little objects are perfume boxes and that the fragrance so thrown abroad is a signal call to the female butterfly, which may be wandering about in the air. It is, to say the least, a very interesting guess, and there is evidence to prove that butterflies and moths are summoned from distances by odors that we would hardly notice.—Philadelphia Times.

in school? Then you have often heard them complain of headache; have frequently noticed how they go about in a listless, indifferent way, haven't you?

Workmen

You have seen hundreds of your countrymen made away (as it is called) with a cold, cough, or a fever. You have seen hundreds of them die with that terrible disease, Consumption. You have seen wives left penniless, and children shorn of their inheritance, because the cold, cough, or the fever, which they caught, has become a fatal disease, and has taken its toll of life. This air you breathe every day is full of germs, and it is these germs which are the cause of the disease. In the case of glass blowers, the heat of the molten glass forces its way up the tube into the lungs where it gradually breaks down their delicate structure, making every cold a danger to life. You can afford to quit working and are daily exposed to this fatal dust and intense heat. What you and your friends need is a safe, healthy remedy. This will make your throat and lungs strong again. It will heal the irritation, loosen up your strength, and you need never lose a day's work. I have noticed that in some mills there are no cases of Consumption. The reason is that the English Remedy is used by the men working there.

Sold at 25c, 50c, and $1 a bottle, throughout the United States and Canada; and in England at 1s. 2d., 2s. 3d., 4s. 6d. If you are not satisfied after buying, return the bottle to your druggist, and get your money back.

We authorize the above guarantee.

Having a Great Run on Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

Manager Martin, of the Pierson drug store, informs us that he is having a great run on Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He sells five bottles of that medicine to one of any other kind, and it gives great satisfaction. In these days of grippe there is nothing like Chamberlain's Cough Remedy to stop the cough, heat up the sore throat and lungs and give relief within a very short time. The sales are growing, and all who try it are pleased with its prompt action.—South Chicago Daily Calumet. For sale by W. L. DeLano.
