SATURDAY - SEPTEMBER 21

BRYAN'S TRIBUTE.

LINCOLN, Neb, Sep 19.—W J Bryan was the principal speaker at the memorial exercises in Lincoln Auditorium tonight. He said in part:

"It is not strange that the people bow as one man over the bier of the illustrious fellow-citizen—not strange that the solemn stillness is broken only by the change of the sacred hymns which he was wont to sing—not strange that all hearts turn in sympathy to the husbandless home at Canton.

"The President's position made him a part of the life of all his countrymen, and the circumstances which attended his taking off added indignation to grief—indignation that even one murderous heart could be found in all the land, and grief that the wicked purpose of that heart should have been consummated against one so gentle in spirit and so kind in word and deed.

"This is neither the time nor place for a discussion of remedies for anarchy, It can have no defenders in the United States; it is harmful, even when no violence is advocated, for it is the duty of every citizen of the Republic to strive to make this Government perfect in every detail, and this purpose is not only weakened, but entirely destroyed by the doctrine that all governments are bad and should be overthrown."

Mr Bryan said no one appreciated more than he the private character and public virtue of William McKinley. He referred feelingly to the death-bed scenes at Buffalo, and the Christian fortitude displayed. His blameless life, approachable manner, and generous conduct were pictured.

CENTURY DEVELOPMENTS.

This has been a century of wonderful development, or more properly speaking the latter half-century. Take farming conditions:

In 1800, the farmer used the sickle, the scythe and the flail. His plow was made of wood, covered with a thin sheet of iron. Seeds were scattered by hand, and the hoe did the cultivating. Grain was gathered by hand threshed on the floor during the winter season, and crushed between a stone pestile into flour or ground in the neighboring flour mill. The mower, reaper and self-binder were unknown. The difference between the conditions on the farm in 1800 and those of 1900 can be best expressed in the following quotation from the Year Book of Agriculture of the United States for 1897:

"When farmers reaped their wheat with sickles and bound the straw by hand, hauled the sheaves to the barn and threshed the grain with flails, those operations, applied to one bushel of wheat, required the labor of one man 160 minutes, whereas this work is now done by the use of a combined reaper and thresher operated by steam, with four minutes of human labor."

WARNING AGAINST MOB RULE.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill, Sept 20.—Speaking at the McKinley memorial exercises here, Former Vice-President Stevenson said:

"It avails little to hurl denunciation against the head of this assassin. Within a few days at most he will, under the forms of law, suffer the death penalty for his crime. It is but cheap courage at best, whether from the streets or from the pulpit, for any man to declare that had he been present he gladly would have been the avenger. Such teaching is a menace to the well-being of society. It may be that the temptation is often great to take the law into our hands. But let it not be forgotten that by so doing we weaken the bonds of society. Mob rule is destructive of all government."

LOOKING BACK

To the time when she was plucked from the very grasp of death, the natural impulse of the womanly heart is thankfulness for the means which saved her, and a desire to help other women in like case. Those are the motives which prompted Mrs. Eva Burnett to write the accompanying testimonial to the curative power of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This is only one cure out of thousands. No one would dare say that the average woman was not as truthful as she is good. And it is the truthful testimony of the average woman that "Favorite Prescription" cures womanly diseases when all other means and medicines absolutely fail. It establishes regularity, dries the drains which weaken women, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness. It tranquilizes the nerves, restores the appetite and induces refreshing sleep.

"I have intended for some time to write to you," says Mrs. Eva Burnett, of Russellville, Logan Co., Ky., "and give a testimonial in regard to what your medicine has done for me. My baby ... and I had congestive chills, and was at death's door for ten long weeks. I was in a dreadful condition and had six of the best doctors of the city. After everything had been done and I had been given up to die I asked my husband to get me a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. He had no faith in it, but he got it, and when I had taken it two weeks I was able to walk to the dining room to my meals, and by the time I had taken three bottles I was able to cook for my family of four. I can never praise Dr. Pierce and his medicine ..."

Greenlee Surprises His Wife.

BY EDWARD F. YOUNGER.

Earl Greenlee had gone about for several days bowed down with the weight of a great secret. His vigilant little wife had exhausted her bountiful store of expedients in trying to discover the mystery. Cajolery, threats, wheedling, expostulation, argument, all the intricate wiles employed by skillful women to get at the inner thoughts of her lord and master, were brought into play without avail.

Finally she became desperate, and to mollify her Greenlee intimated that he was planning a joyous surprise for her. He let fall the hint that he had been on the right side of the stocks in a recent deal and "wifey" was going to reap the benefit. Beyond this he would not utter a word.

At last he announced with a grand flourish that his surprise was ripe. Without going into any details he would simply suggest that any one who was interested might have his or her curiosity satisfied by securing a position at the front windows at or about 2 o'clock that afternoon. Then he hastened away, despite the almost angry protests of "wifey" that he certainly should tell her in advance of the others. But Greenlee was obdurate. "The surprise is for you, dearie," he said, "and I want it to be complete. I shall look for you at the front window up stairs about 2 o'clock, and when you see what it is you will forgive me for not telling you and spoiling it all."

As soon as he had departed all the women in the house immediately went into executive session for the four-hundredth time since they had first noticed symptoms of Greenlee's secret. All of the old straw was vigorously thrashed over, but they were finally forced to give up the problem, just as they had done before. Then Mrs. Greenlee went up stairs and indulged in a spiteful little cry all by her lonesome. After this she bathed her eyes, put on her best clothes, eradicated the tear stains with plentiful dabs of powder, and hunted up the other women to see if any of them had evolved a working idea, but they were still groping in the dark.

Meanwhile the day wore on and 2 o'clock was approaching. The residents of the house lined up at the windows after much sparring for the best positions. The little ormolu clock chimed the hour of 2, and five pairs of eyes searched the avenue up and down, but there was no trace of Earl Greenlee and his monstrous "surprise." Occasionally some one would go to the street door and peer through the maze of vehicles and individuals thronging the avenue, and it was even suggested that opera glasses might be used to advantage. Then the clock struck the hour of 3.

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Greenlee, bouncing to her feet. "I had an engagement with the church committee of which I am chairman at 3 o'clock. It will never do to miss it, and I'm going, surprise or no surprise. I have already waited an hour for Mr. Greenlee, and now he can wait an hour for me. Tie my face veil, please; I'm in a dreadful hurry. Dear me! I was never late in my life before, and it's all on account of Earl Greenlee and his exasperating mystery."

Ten minutes later she was whirling down the avenue in a cab she had hailed at the corner, busily engaged in framing a suitable excuse for her tardiness, when the cab slowed up. "What is the matter, cabman? I told you to drive rapidly. You must not stop until we reach the church."

"Had to stop, mem; there's somethin doin ahead of us here, and my horse is skeart."

Mrs. Greenlee opened the cab door and peered out. Then she stepped out. Just ahead of them, careening from one side of the avenue to the other, butting sidewalks and lampposts, madly charging the curbing, roaring, hissing and snorting, was an automobile. Finally the unruly machine gave one triumphant lunge, vainly tried to climb up the solid stone wall of a clubhouse and fell back, broken and helpless, a mass of twisted steel and pungent gasoline.

Then the wreck of a man pried himself loose from the smoking debris and flopped down on the edge of the sidewalk, where he swore softly and scraped the oil from what remained of his garments.

"Dear me! I wonder if the man is badly hurt?" said Mrs. Greenlee as she adjusted her heliotrope toque and walked over to where he was sitting. The man looked up. Smudges of dust and oil, streaks of gasoline, traces of blood and shreds of clothing adorned his countenance.

"Merciful heavens—Earl Greenlee!" screamed his wife, throwing her hands into the air and threatening to collapse.

"That's all right, dearie; I'm not hurt." Then he slowly and painfully arose and surveyed the wreckage beside him. "I ordered this automobile three weeks ago—meant to give it to you—guess I have not had time to learn it yet, but I intended to surprise you."

"Well, well!" said little Mrs. Greenlee, panting with excitement and wringing her hands. "Well, you've certainly surprised me. Yes, you've been even more successful than that—you've shocked me. Now, get right into this cab and let me hurry you home before any of our friends see you."

The church committee fretted and stewed and conjectured, but the able chairman did not come. The other residents of the Greenlee house kept ceaseless vigil at the front windows, but they were disappointed, for his wife sneaked him in the back way.—Chicago Record-Herald.
