A Deep Mystery.

It is a mystery why women endure backache, headache, nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, fainting and dizzy spells when thousands have proved that Electric Bitters will quickly cure such troubles. "I suffered for years with kidney trouble" writes Mrs Phebe Cherley, or Peterson, Ia, "and a lame back pained me so I could not dress myself, but Electric Bitters wholly cured me, and, although 73 years old, I now am able to do all my housework." It overcomes constipation, improves appetite, gives perfect health. Only 50c at W L Delano's drug store.

Newly Furnished Lodging House.

New beds in newly painted and papered rooms at the Courthouse Lodging House. Only one block from the main business street, and but a little more than two blocks from the postoffice. A very quiet locality.

Lodging with or without board as desired. Come and see the rooms and I will guarantee that you will be satisfied. ED HOWE.

THE CONFEDERATE'S RUSE.

"Say, son," said the colonel, "do you know what a good all up and down the backbone thrill is worth?"

"Where does the thrill come in?" Maxwell, the colonel's partner, called from his corner. The colonel chuckled, then said very slowly, "Can you imagine how it feels to know yourself within an inch of hanging?"

"Oh, there's a story! Tell it," Maxwell said, putting down his pen. The colonel flung over to him the most unforgivable of the penwipers, then sat down on the edge of my desk, folded his arms and began:

"Don't know that I ever told you I fit for Cousin Sally Ann, as our company wag used to express serving the Confederacy. But I did. I was a daredevil too. Would you think so to look at me now?"

"Not much," we said in chorus. He smiled and went on: "I belonged to Mr Forrest's 'critter company.' You don't know it, but that means that I had a heap of chances to get myself shot. He was a fighter from 'way back, was Mr. Forrest. But that didn't feaze the boys who rode with him. It was what they were there for. He made things lively, I tell you, in the country between the rivers—the Cumberland and Tennessee. North of the Cumberland, after Donelson fell, it was mighty hazardous for a graycoat to venture. The river could be forded only in time of drought, and the strict gunboat patrol made swimming or sailing across it about as dangerous as anything could be. Still we wanted now and then to get news of our friends, the enemy, over there, and one day I volunteered to swim the river and bring back word to my chief. 'Go if you're a mind ter, Billy, but I sorter think you'll come back dead,' he said. But I went. Home was across the river, you see, and a girl who—but never mind. I didn't see her that trip.

"Hardly had I crossed when I ran plump upon a former overseer, who was, I knew, a Union man. He recognized me at once, yet if I had been the prodigal son his welcome could not have been warmer. When I asked if he meant to inform on me, he almost cried. His feelings were so hurt, indeed, that I had to agree to stay all night at his house and let him help me next morning across the river, which was the main lion in my homeward path. 'I wanter show ye Jessermine's drorin's, too,' he said. 'Ye ain't fergot Jessermine—she's the little young un yer ma used ter make much on. Growed up now, she is, an er scholler right. Why, she paints cows an hawgs an sech like that natchul ye cain't help but know 'em.'

"I didn't know 'em—not apart, I mean—until Jessermine herself differentiated them for me. She was a big, fair girl, wholesome as the day is long. It gave me a heap of comfort to hear her whisper as we separated for the night: 'Pap's the only Union man in this family. I'd fight for the Confederacy every day in the year if only I had not been born a girl.'

"The speech was still more comforting when I got up in the morning and found a whole division of bluecoats stacking arms in the turnpike outside the gate. They had made a night march and meant to cross the river the next day. I was trapped squarely and likely within ten hours to dangle from a limb. If my host did not betray me, my horse in his stable, with cavalry saddle and holsters, most certainly would. Escape was out of the question. They were before and behind me and all around, with more coming in each half hour.

"Then every mother's son of 'em was mighty mad with Forrest. He had whipped 'em when he had no right to do it and run when they ought to have whipped him. There was, besides, a sort of talk of retaliation. Altogether I made up my mind that I had less than six hours of life, unless a miracle saved me or Jessermine stood my friend.

"She did that, like the trump she was. 'Don't you worry,' she said when she brought me breakfast. 'Eat hearty an rest all you can, until I get them Yankees all fed. It's likely you may have to ride all night without stoppin, but don't you be uneasy whatever you do.'

"Will you believe it, I trusted that girl blindly—lay down and slept like a top until she was back again. She had her paintbox and brushes, besides a couple of raw onions. When she had told me her plan for me, I laughed until I cried.

"Carry it out? I shouldn't be here if I had not. That afternoon, about 2 o'clock, a man rode wearily into the camp. His eyes were red and swollen and ran water continually. He was broken out all over with red, angry looking pustules. 'Take me to your general. I—I surrender. I am Captain Lillard of Forrest's cavalry,' he said in a weak voice. 'I want to be sent to the hospital. As you see, I have smallpox'—

"The sentry waited to hear no more. He passed the prisoner on like a hot potatoe. So did the corporal of the guard, and so, in the end, did the general. The prisoner, whose eyes kept getting redder and more watery, smelled strongly of onions, but none of them came near enough to perceive it. By 4 o'clock he had been escorted to the river bank and told to cross it or drown or do anything that pleased him except strew infection through a United States army corps. He did cross the river—he got safely to Mr. Forrest, too—but did not escape quite scot free. It was all of a month before Jessermine's paint wore off."

Sharks.

"Did you meet any sharks when you crossed the ocean, Mr. Spifkins?" asked Miss Purling.

"Well," replied Spifkins sadly, "I played with a couple."—Town Topics.

YAQUINA OYSTERS

Professor Washburn Finds Spawn Does Not Develop.

WATER TOO COLD.

Prof F L Washburn, of the State University, Oregon state biologist, visited Yaquina Bay during the holiday vacation of the University to do some work on the Eastern oysters planted there. Professor Washburn reports the oysters in good condition, with some of them attaining a large size, says the Albany Herald. Very few young oysters have been found, and he is of the opinion, and has been some time, that while Eastern oyster spawns in the bay, the water is too cold to allow the spawn to develop. Nevertheless he has been of the opinion that to import the Eastern oysters, while in a young state, and to plant them in various bays of Oregon Yaquina, and Coos bays for example, and then to market them, would be a safe and profitable investment. He has several times urged men with capital to take up such a proposition. There is a good opening for such a business at Yaquina and particularly at Coos bay, on both of which salt water inlets Professor Washburn has done work with this idea in view.

An opportunity has been precented the state biologist of securing some Eastern oysters, and probably some oysters from Japan for experimental purposes. The Japanese oyster is very large. The European oyster is somewhat larger than the native oyster of this coast, and similar to it in structure and habits.

These experiments in oyster propagation at Yaquina Bay have been conducted for four years, the United States government and the state authorities assisting materially in the work. The oysters planted in the bay were secured from East River, New York, and from Long Island Sound. The first consignment consisted of 22 barrels, and were planted by C H Townsend, under the supervision of the late H G McGuire, at that time state fish commissioner. Professor Washburn himself planted the second consignment of 10 barrels of Eastern oysters.

FISCHER & VAN CLEVE CO.—The Vancouver department of the Portland Telegram compliments the Fischer & Van Cleve Co and its orchestra, which is made up of several Eugene men, as follows: "The Fischer & Van Cleve repertoire company are proving themselves very popular here, judging from the well pleased audiences that leave the theater every night. Last night the honors were carried off by Mr Van Cleve and Mr Covington. It has been a long time since Vancouver had the pleasure of hearing such a grand orchestra as is with this company."

The proprietors of the well known Orpheum vaudeville theatre of San Francisco are in Portland with a view of building a branch theatre in that city. If it is built it will have a seating capacity of 2000.

Perils of Our Presidents.

All our presidents have been in the habit of mingling freely with the people, usualy without any particular precaution being made for their safety. The danger of this has been so emphatically pointed out in the last few months that wise statesmen suggest that the old plan be discontinued. There is also cause for great danger in many of the so-called remedies advertised for stomach, liver and bowel complaints. The safest medicine to take is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It has been before the public for fifty years, and has always been found safe and reliable in cases of nervousness, insomnia, indigestion, dyspepsia and malaria, fever and ague. It therefore occupies the foremost position in the list of household remedies, and no family should be without it.
