CHECKMATE

A Story of the Bull Ring in Mexico.

By AMY MINCHER PARISH

La Fiesta de San Juan was at its height. Ginnajuto was turning out from its serpentine streets, close built and ill smelling, its hordes of humanity, from the family of the Gobernador, handsome, well dressed and modern, down to the swarms of beggars, with sightless eyes and deformed limbs, bearing in their bodies the mark of Mexico, with her dark past.

The whole movement was toward the Plaza, the upper town, where the aristocratic element had by a natural law appropriated to itself the better air, prodigal in sunshine and flowers, clean water and fresh breezes, secure against the ever present dread of typhus.

Reservoirs supplying the city with water gave the location its name, and now, on the recurrence of his birthday, St. John, the apostle of healing waters, was to cleanse the city. The gates were to be opened and the process was to empty their flood into the new, nearly dry river bed, carrying with it in a mad rush to the Lagos the year's accumulation of disease and debris.

The wealth and ultra fashion were out in carriages. Laughing faces of dark eyed senoritas dividing the attention with the picturesque vendors of holiday dulces or sweets, impossible gyrating monsters, ear spitting whistles and rattling devil's boxes, wildcat little urchins who played cart wheel and leapfrog or did tricks for centavos.

But the crowning event was to be the annual bullfight, in which, instead of professional matadores, young caballeros, men of high social rank, were to contend for the honors bestowed by the fair hand of the queen of beauty.

Great preparations had been made for this special function, and long before the appointed hour the rose garlanded old amphitheater, where since the days of Cortes man and beast had met in an uninterrupted series of unequal combats, was filled to overflowing.

On one side rose tier upon tier of dark eyed senoritas, closely guarded by ever watchful senoritas; on the other side young bloods (haciendados), with the tightest of trousers and broadest of sombreros, heavily loaded with gold and silver trappings, here and there one in tailoring from the latest Parisian models, for everything French is undeniably dear and desirable to the Mexican heart.

While awaiting the arrival of the queen of the fiesta the audience centered its attention upon two men in their midst—Phillip Carter, the energetic, elegant American, whose homage to the royal Isabella during his few weeks' sojourn in Guanajuato had already given him notoriety, and Senor Enrique Costillo, a recognized suitor, even now "playing the bear" for her favor.

The presence of the latter, one of the best of their senoritas matadores, in the audience, signifying that he was to have no part in the fray, was causing evident comment among his friends.

They could not know how the weary waiting for a signal from his love, the zealous devotion newly stimulated by a demon of jealousy born of Carter's evident favor with the girl, the very ardor of his passion had consumed his strength to such an extent that he knew better than to trust his future to a hand that trembled if, but in the presence of her he loved.

But the Senorita Isabella's royal beauty as she now sat enthroned in the midst of her maids of attendance, the lovely face with its brilliant eyes peeping from the meshes of exquisite face, the hand wrought mantilla without which no queen of the bullfight is regally arrayed, lips ripe and red as the heart of a pomegranate, were fast arousing in him the desire to bring upon himself not the mere smile and victor's wreath, the applause of the audience, but a tribute to daring that should carry with it herself and her love.

What did she want of the love of a gringo? Because she had lived in their country a few months did she know them with their heart of ice? Did she think her lover tropical enough to warm a home in the north into any semblance of her country?

He had felt so unnerved, so wearied with the pacing to and fro in heat and cold, day and night, in front of her dwelling, walking where she walked, waiting where she rested and seeing the smile that belonged to him by every precedent of their race given to a few Americans, a gringo from over the line!

But jealousy, strong as death in Mexico, can also give strength. Two bulls had already been slain, and the third had dangling from his shoulders six gayly decorated banderillas, or sharpened rods, furious and snorting, he was waiting to attack the red cloth, this time to his death, when a shout, lost in a roar of fear, sounded far up and down the city.

A man, placing his hands on the barrier dividing the audience from the arena, had as deliberately leaped over it to death as a schoolboy to play. Snatching the red rag, he approached the maddened beast, who was pawing the ground, bellowing with pain and anger, gathering his fury for a final charge upon those who dared to so torture him.

The noise of the audience died into appalling silence as it recognized Don Enrique.

There was no time for conjecture as to the cause for his action. His fate would be decided in one moment of time.

To the Public.

When within two feet of his victim, Sir Toro closed his eyes in a murderous lunge, while the man from whom Enrique had taken the red cloth made a dash for safety behind the grating.

But there was hot blood in that son of the south, too, and the red flag of jealousy had flamed itself in his face, and the audience with wonder saw him skip to one side safe, and before the bull could recover from his disappointment leap from the side into the very embrace of death.

Two arms clasped the animal's throats like bands of steel. The astonished beast lunged and tossed in a vain endeavor to free himself. The goods bent and snapped, dropping one by one.

Then the dated people woke to a realization of this bit of daring, and groans and hurrahs rose again and again from 15,000 throats as those two struggled in an encounter unheard of before in the history of bullfighting.

But never since the days of Ursus has jealousy or desire for revenge, nor love even, matched human arms with the strength of a bull, and Enrique's grasp must surely weaken.

To drop now was certain death beneath the angry hoofs which had paved the ground so that man and beast were of the earth's color.

Then the young senior who, in the role of matador, was to have dispatched this bull, came to his work with a coolness hardly less notable than Enrique's daring, and braving the usual disgrace of attacking the bull when not charging, watched his chance and pointed the sword.

The bull, seeing a more feasible enemy, charged to his own death. For, opening the fingers so that the bit rested in the palm of his hand, Don Enrique so steered it that the onward impetus of the animal forced the keen blade into the very arch of the aorta. One moment, as if daring even this, and over he fell.

Don Enrique gave a bound over the neck and, alighting on his feet, walked forward to the queen to receive the reward for his daring for her sake.

The crowd roared and howled and stamped in its excitement. Beautiful girls snatched off their silken shawls, their flowers, cigars, hats, canes and handkerchiefs by the thousands and in a shower into the arena.

But Enrique was for something more. Surely she knew he had done it for her sake! Did she think her American lover would have done as much?

But even as she placed the crown on his brow with hands that trembled and with eyes shy and beautiful he saw that she, too, had seen Carter rapidly threading his way to them between the benches.

"Querida mia," Enrique whispered as her eyes dropped to his. But he knew the sudden flush that dyed her face from throat to brow was not born of that endearment.

That evening old Don Jose, the landlord of the Hotel del Jardin, met Don Enrique coming from Phillip Carter's apartments.

"No cata aqui," said the old man. "He is not here. His American senorita and her father came for him this morning, and they have just taken themselves away on the train."

The disappointed anger on Enrique's face did not lessen any.

"I have left a remembrance for him. When he returns, he will find it, and do you tell him Enrique Costillo left it."

"Diable!" said old Don Jose when he found Enrique's dagger driven to the hilt through the covers of Phillip Carter's bed.

Two weeks later he received word from Carter to forward his traps to the office of the Mexican Central.

Possibly Carter considered that in Guanajuato there was nothing of sufficient interest for the American girl who was to be his wife—Vogue.

The End of the Bear.
Bear Nash, like Bear Fielding and Bear Brumwell, was to expiate his contemptible vanity in an old age of obscurity, want and misery. As he grew old he grew insolent and seemed insensible to the pain he gave to others by his coarse remarks. He was no longer the gay, thoughtless, idly industrious creature he once was. The evening of his life grew cloudy, and nothing but poverty lay in the prospect before him. Abandoned by the great, whom he had so long served, he was obliged to fly to those lumber stations for protection and began to need that charity which he had never refused to any and to learn that a life of gayety finds an inevitable end in misery and regret.

A new generation sprang up to which Nash was a stranger. His splendor gradually waned. Neglect filled him with bitterness, and he lost thereby the remainder of his popularity. His income now became very precarious, so that the corporation voted him an allowance of 10 guineas, to be paid him on the first Monday in each month. He long occupied a house known as Gurlick's Head, subsequently occupied by Mrs. Delaney, but he died in a smaller one near by—Nineteenth Century.

Alligators and Crocodiles.
Alligators, according to the late Professor Cope, belong to a much more modern genus than that of their cousins the crocodiles. No undoubtedly extinct species of alligator has ever been discovered by geologists, but those animals are fast being exterminated at the present day on account of the value of their hides. Alligators are found in China as well as in North America. The crocodile exists in Africa, southern Asia and northern Australia. The crocodile differs from the alligator in preferring salt water to fresh, and in being more violent in its disposition.

Blown to Atoms.
The old idea that the body sometimes needs a powerful, drastic, purgative pill has been exploded, for Dr King's New Life Pills, which are perfectly harmless, gently stimulate liver and bowels to expel poisonous matter, cleanse the system and absolutely cure constipation and sick headache. A Strong Woman

Iowa City, Iowa, Aug. 15, 1900
My wife was sick for three years. We tried everything without relief and spent much money. My wife tried Wine of Cardui and four bottles cured her. She took two more bottles, knowing she would have to work hard during the hay harvest. She attended to all her household duties and looked and acted all the time. This medicine gave her strength. Formerly she was weak and tired and could hardly get about, but since she has taken Wine of Cardui she feels better and stronger than when 20 years of age. J. OS. A. EISENHAUER.

Mrs. Eisenhauer had tried everything during her three years sickness and had spent considerable money. She was weak and could hardly get about for three years before she took

WINE OF CARDUI

Now, after taking the Wine of Cardui, she can work with her husband in the hay field. This is hard work, but it is not as injurious to a woman's health as labor in stores, factories and offices where thousands of girls are closely confined year after year. With the aid of Wine of Cardui, they are enabled to do their share of the health that Wine of Cardui brings makes a woman vigorous in body and mind. Freed from those terrible devastating pains a woman grows well and strong naturally. Wine of Cardui regulates the disordered menstruation and cures leucorrhoea, falling of the womb and periodical pains in the head and back caused by standing or sitting a long time in the same position. Theodore's Black-Draught puts the bowels, stomach, liver, kidneys and blood in proper shape. Greatly increased strength and endurance is the natural result. Most cases are cured quickly. All druggists sell 50¢ bottles of Wine of Cardui and 25 cent packages of Theodore's Black-Draught.
