SAVED BY THE BELLS

Gerald Wykham was a struggler to literature. He had grown tired of hearing the postman come down the hallway with refusals of his productions and was convinced that luck was against him. Men must have a scapegoat, and when their energies fail of accomplishing some desired end, possibly through their own blindness or mismanagement, they attribute their failure to luck.

So Gerald sat and thought of his prospects, and it did not require much effort to cover them all. He cast up his accounts mentally and balanced his assets against his liabilities. Of the latter, thank God, there were none to amount to anything, and of the former—well, the account balanced nicely. His watch was silver, and old at that. His lawbooks were not numerous, and old lawbooks are a drug on the market at any time. His furniture was rickety and cheap. So there was nothing to be gained in trying to sell that. He threw out his hands in a sort of deprecating appeal to the world as he sat there in the darkness. What was there to live for? There was nothing in life that he could see. He had no intimate friends—he had been too much wrapped up in his business to make them.

He had many pleasant acquaintances, but they are rarely friends. A friend is one who is willing to give something for nothing, and Gerald knew that there was none such among the men who greeted him pleasantly day after day. He had no family save a distant cousin or two, who would regard it as a blessing, perhaps, if he were out of the way. "Out of the way" that phrase woke a train of thought in his mind. He dropped his head upon his hands and thought of getting rid of his miserable life. He sat there and heard nothing. The colored janitor shuffled down the hallway and closed the staircase window, grumbling the while about the weights being too heavy and the windows being likely to open themselves "jes" when they're a shovelin' mebbe a blizzard a-ragin'.

But Gerald did not hear him. The room was growing darker and colder at the time, but the man's heart was so much darker and colder that he felt nothing. He was thoroughly discouraged, and when a man gets thoroughly discouraged, when, like this one, his funds and his prospects are all gone; when the streets, and the factories, and the newspapers, are all filled with forms and names begging for employment, and the discouraged man knows no trade or profession save the one which has failed, then comes the desire to sleep—to die—to end the futile struggle for existence anyhow, to stop thinking. It goes further than a discussion of the question, "Is life worth living?" and it becomes merely a bald statement, "Death were better."

Gerald reached for the drawer in his desk, where his revolver, loaded with ball, lay close to his hand. It would be a quick way out of the difficulty—a momentary twinge of pain, then blessed oblivion.

The 6 o'clock bells were ringing, and the man rose with a bitter smile. The mocking bells rang on, merrily, merrily chasing the tones up and down the scale. He looked at the pistol, cocked it. Hark! There came in through that hall window, which must have opened itself again, the strains of "Coronation." The bells had ceased their mockery and were ringing out the old hymn tunes—the tunes his mother used to play on the old melodeon and sing to him. He stopped, and the pistol slowly fell by his side. Then the air changed, and the chimes rolled the grand strains of "Adeste Fideles."

Oh, come, all ye faithful—
Was he faithful to himself? Was he faithful to his manhood?

Joyful and triumphant—
Was there nothing at all in life worth living for? Had he not advised a disconsolate friend to cheer up and make one more step out to better things? The pistol dropped from his hand on to the table, and the air played by the bells was now one of comfort——to the merry seat.
Faintly kneed.

Through the snow laden twilight the notes of the hymn sounded—
Here bring your wounded hearts,
Here tell your anguish—

The memory of the little old church at home came back to him—the memory of his mother's death and how the hymn comforted his childish heart. Earth hath no sorrow that heaven cannot heal. There came a shuffle on the floor of the hallway, and the light of a lantern shone over the transom. A knock on the door; but the man within stood with his face buried in his hands and heeded it not. Then a letter was slipped through and fell with a soft tap on the bare and dirty floor.

The bells were silent as the man stepped forward, picked up the letter, and with a bitter smile read the stamp on the corner. He knew it so well! Another polite refusal, or a request to send postage. He tore it open. What! A thin piece of paper—"We should be glad to see more of your work." Ah! The bells, the bells rang out and out—
Praise God, from whom all blessings flow—
Praise God! Nothing else would do. Praise God and bless the bells—the bells—
Praise him above, ye heavenly host;
Praise Father, Son and Holy Ghost!

The man fell on his knees as the bells ceased, and from that dingy room there went up a prayer—one of the rare prayers that are poured forth from a joyful heart and go straight to heaven. And the bells of St. Mark's had saved a soul.

No Disappointment.
"Isn't your new house taking longer to build than you expected?"
"Oh, no! I've only spent twice as much on it so far as I anticipated."—

Judge Boise at Roseburg.

Judge R P Boise, of Salem, has been holding court at Roseburg, relieving Judge Hamilton. His dry humor crops out when least expected, as the following from the Roseburg Review will show:
In passing sentence the other day on a fellow named Clark who stole a $10 overcoat Judge Boise stated that the prisoner's offense was less grave because he had stolen a coat from a barn and not from a house. "I sentence you to one month's imprisonment in the county jail," said the judge "and you will understand that in imposing such a sentence the county receives more punishment than you do."

The Sword Discarded.

In the British army the sword has been discarded, so far as its usefulness is concerned in modern warfare. A half century ago it was considered the best weapon, but the rifle has now taken its place. At the present time thousands of people are discarding their old methods of trying to cure stomach and bowel complaints, and are using the old reliable Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It has never been known to fail in cases of indigestion, dyspepsia, constipation, biliousness, liver and kidney troubles, or malaria, fever and ague, and a trial is therefore recommended. It has been before the public for fifty years, and by its record of cures during that time has firmly established its superiority over all other remedies. Try a bottle and satisfy yourself.

Start Girls Right!
Many beautiful girls become invalids for life, because at the crucial period of puberty they pay no attention to the laws of health. Mothers should protect their daughters' health by giving them necessary information and proper treatment. When the menses come on a girl unawares in her inexperience she is either frightened into convulsions, or scared into trying to check the flow. Many girls have checked the flow and it has never started again. And as a result they have grown pale-faced, with "crow-tracks" on their cheeks, and dark half-moons under their eyes. A dose of taken every morning after a girl is twelve years old will bring the menses on properly and keep them regular. It will help her to develop into attractive womanhood and equip her for the duties of wife and motherhood. All druggists sell $1.00 bottles of Wine of Cardui.
WINE OF CARDUI

The Hollywood, Ashbury Park, N. J., February 3, 1900.
I read your advertisement in regard to Wine of Cardui in the Baltimore American, and it so favorably impressed me that on my visit to Baltimore during the holidays I purchased a bottle of it for my adopted daughter, who was suffering with female troubles. She had been under the doctor's care for some time, and when her periods would come on her suffering was something terrible. I induced her to try it and the first dose brought on her menses. She took it regularly according to the directions, and was greatly relieved. To use her own words, "It saved my life." J. WESLEY CROSS.
