AN AGREEMENT AT THE LODGE

"It is rather hard on a woman to have her husband get home at 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning," said Hawkins. Hawkins is the past grand imperial emperor and potentate of Silver Moon lodge No. 57.

"I'll tell you what we'll do," he went on. "We three chaps will agree, if you say so, when we go home this morning—it's half after 1 o'clock now—to do whatever our respective wives suggest. We ought to do something to even things up. What do you say?"

"The chap who fails to do exactly what his wife suggests or even hints at must buy the supper for the crowd," said Hawkins. "Are you all in on it?"

The three pledged their assent.

They met one night less than a week later and Elliott said: "Well, Tompkins, how did you come out?"

"All right," said the little man. "The supper isn't on me. It was 3 o'clock when I got home. I was getting along all right, and it seemed certain that I would get to my room on the third floor without disturbing a soul, when my foot struck a chair which somebody had carelessly left standing on the stairs. The chair turned over and went rattling and bumping down the stairs."

"Hello," called Mrs. Tompkins. "I suppose that is you, Henry?"

"Yes, dear," I said. "It is I."

"Well," she said, "it's a wonder you wouldn't break the chair all to pieces."

"I remembered our agreement, and although it was hard work I finally got that chair broken up. The chair was hardwood and it took me a long time to do it, but there was nothing left when I got through."

"And you, Elliott," said Hawkins sadly.

"I'm all right," said the magnificent interior sentinel. "I had nearly the same experience. I broke into the house without rousing anybody and was just about to go under the wire an easy winner when I stepped on Mrs. Elliott's pet Angora cat."

"Thomas," said Mrs. Elliott.

"Yes, dear," I answered. "I stepped on Clarence. He was sleeping here on the stairs, and I was trying to get up to bed without disturbing you."

"Well," said Mrs. Elliott, "it's a wonder you wouldn't kill the poor dear."

"With our agreement in mind I took her suggestion as a command and after some difficulty finally got a firm hold of Clarence and of my revolver. A cat has nine lives, you know, but I finally succeeded in carrying out my wife's wishes in the matter."

"Hawkins, it's up to you."

The past grand imperial emperor heaved a deep sigh.

"I've got a long story to tell," he said. "Let's put it off till we have more time."

But the other men were relentless.

"I don't mind confessing," he began, "that I went home determined to stick one of you fellows for the supper. In fact, I may as well admit that I had made arrangements before I left home that evening to get in by the side door, and I was sure not a soul in the house would hear me. I had it all carefully planned, and it wasn't at all my fault that it didn't work out as I figured."

"I stayed down town until 4 o'clock on purpose, because I knew that people sleep most soundly just before the dawn. Before I went in I walked all around the house and saw that there wasn't a light burning anywhere."

"I even took the trouble to look up the policeman on the beat, and he assured me that there hadn't been a light lit in my house since 10 o'clock. Under the circumstances I felt that it would be easy to get in without being caught at it. At the time I wouldn't have given you chaps a nickel for your chance of eating at my expense."

"Finally I let myself in at the side door without making a sound that could have disturbed a mouse. Then with a pocket electric light, which I always carry with me, I lit myself through library and drawing room into the hall."

"Then, like a wise man, I sat down on the steps to take off my shoes, so as to make assurance doubly sure. Just as I was pulling off the second shoe my foot slipped, and I kicked over the other shoe which I had set down on the stairs beside me. It went bumping down to the bottom, striking on every step with a racket which was frightful."

"Who's there?" cried my wife in a naturally startled voice.

"It's only me, dear," I answered in my most ingratiating tone. "I'm afraid I dropped one of my shoes."

"For goodness' sake," she said, "are you just getting home from lodge? What time is it, anyhow?"

"It's just about 12 o'clock, dear," I answered.

"Then the cuckoo clock in the library struck 4, and in order to make good I had to sit there on those stairs and cuckoo eight times more to make up twelve."

"Well, it's time you were home, at any rate," she said.

"I started up stairs again, going fast now, because I thought I might as well get inside my room and close the door before anything else happened."

"I was on the next to the last step when my toe caught on a loose bit of carpet, and I fell forward, only saving myself by putting out my hands. In which I carried my shoes. Of course the shoes made a terrible racket as they struck the stairway, and Mrs. Hawkins was roused to action once more."

"It's a wonder," she called, "that you wouldn't fall down stairs and break your neck."

"That sticks Hawkins" from all—Chicago Tribune.

NEWLY FURNISHED LODGING HOUSE.

New beds in newly painted and papered rooms at the Courthouse Lodging House. Only one block from the main business street, and but a little more than two blocks from the postoffice. A very quiet locality. Outside rooms at rear corners away from hall, splendid for day sleeping. Windows of these rooms under projecting roof, cutting off much of the light.

Lodging with or without board as desired. Come and see the rooms and I will guarantee that you will be satisfied.

Ed Howe,

LOVE BY TELEGRAPH

"Good morning, Brandon." I responded. "Good morning, Dan." "The former operator died last night, and I have taken his place."

"What is your name?" I asked.

"Nellie Merton. What is yours?"

A spirit of mischief prompted my reply.

"Harry Clayborn."

Every day I bid my unseen acquaintance "good morning" and never closed up at night without a farewell message. A twinge of conscience racked me at times, and a still, small voice whispered its warning, but the temptation was too great, and it was not long before I was sending sly messages to the unseen Nellie.

It was no end of fun. She told me her history. She had run away from home because her parents insisted upon marrying her to a man she detested, and the last word came clicking viciously from my end of the line. She would never marry him—never.

Well, the outcome of it all was that I asked the unseen Nellie to be my wife and even described the little house that was lonesomely awaiting her coming. I was floundering in deep water and could but trust to a merciful Providence to pull me out. My fun was becoming dead earnest.

That virtue was almost exhausted when the well known call fell on my ear. I flew to the instrument. It was, of course, but not very complimentary.

"Rather than marry that brute I will risk it."

I was in for it now. I, Della Browne, was engaged to be married to a young lady I had never seen. This was forcing the question of woman's rights.

I carried the fun on for over three months, and every day it grew less funny until I began to brood over the predicament into which I had led my feet. The time was rapidly approaching when I would have to claim my bride.

At last I could bear it no longer, and one day, just three weeks before I was to travel to Danwood and claim my bride, I got into the train with another motive. It was to kiss and make up after I had begged her with tears to forgive me, etc.

I found the telegraph office. It was occupied by a young man reading a paper. I looked at him without speaking, and he returned the compliment in kind.

"I wish to see Miss Nellie Merton," I said, and as he did not speak I went on to explain: "I am the operator at Brandon and desire to see her on important business. A moment's delay means my life."

"So you are the operator at Brandon and wish to see Miss Merton. I am sorry to disappoint you; but, you see, Miss Merton is at home at the present time, while I take her place. The fact is she is going to be married and is preparing for the great event. She cannot be seen personally, but if you will intrust the message to me I will deliver it immediately if you will take my place while I run around to the house."

"I must see her," I said excitedly.

"But you cannot," he said coolly. "I have orders not to let any one know her whereabouts for a day or two until these preparations are well under way."

"Don't say another word. You will set me wild. If you won't tell me where to find her," I went on in desperation, "will you please tell her this? I have been a wicked girl, and—and there is no such person as Harry Clayborn. It started in fun, and—and please let me go to her. She will understand me so much better than you can explain it."

"No such person as Harry Clayborn! My dear young lady, I must beg leave to differ with you. That is the name of the young gentleman who in three short weeks is to marry Miss Merton. Surely he is not dead?" he added in consternation.

"Oh, will you not understand! It was all a joke at first. I thought it would be great fun, and so I—well, I am Harry Clayborn, and after a time we became engaged—all in fun too. I tried to stop, but was so wicked I could not, and now poor Nellie will break her heart. And—and—"

Here I broke down and began to cry in a miserable way. Unlike most men, my companion was not in the least disconcerted at the sight of my tears, but simply laughed loud and long.

Presently the laughter ceased. Then I heard uneasy movements in the chair occupied by my companion. Then he got up and paced about restlessly. Pretty soon a gentle touch fell upon my arm, and his voice, very kind, said: "Nellie is here to receive your confession and forgiveness."

I dried my eyes and looked up, but saw no one but the tall, handsome young man, who was looking at me very earnestly.

"Where is she?" I asked, ready to cry again.

"Here," he said, holding out his hand. Instinctively I put mine into it, and it closed over it firmly.

"I also have a confession to make," he said earnestly. "I thought you were another young fellow like myself, and wishing to relieve the tedium of these long, monotonous days, struck up a flirtation. In short," he ended abruptly, "I am Nellie Merton and you are Harry Clayborn. Come, dry your eyes, Harry. Your Nellie is not heartbroken at the turn of affairs."

A year later he appeared in my office.

"You asked me to marry you, and I consented. I have come today to ask, Will you come, or shall I enter an action for breach of promise?"

What could I say or do?

WINE OF CARDUI

Now, after taking the Wine of Cardui, she can work with her husband in the hay field. That is hard work, but it is not as injurious to a woman's health as labor in stores, factories and offices where thousands of girls are closely confined year after year. With the aid of Wine of Cardui she can do any reasonable work and enjoy good health. The Wine of Cardui regulates the disordered menstruation and cures leucorrhoea, falling of the womb and periodical pains in the head and back caused by standing or sitting a long time in the same position. The Wine of Cardui puts the bowels, stomach, liver, kidneys and blood in proper shape. Greatly increased strength and endurance is the natural result. Most cases are cured quickly. All druggists sell $1.00 bottles of Wine of Cardui and 25 cent packages of Theodor's Black Draught.

A Strong Woman

Iowa City, Iowa, Aug. 15, 1909.

My wife was sick for three years. We tried everything without relief and spent much money. My wife tried Wine of Cardui and four bottles cured her. She took two more bottles, knowing she would have to work hard during the hay harvest. She attended to all her household duties and loaded and unloaded all the hay. This medicine gave her strength. Formerly she was weak and tired and could hardly get about, but since she has been taking Wine of Cardui she feels better and stronger than when 20 years of age. J. O. & B. H. HANDEL.
