THE GIRL AT SMITH'S

By BARRY PAIN.

"Well," he said, continuing his story of his experience in the haunted room in the middle of the night I woke suddenly. The bolts which I had fastened were rattling back again. Then the creak of the door went with a click. I heard heavy steps enter the room. My hand was already on the switch, and in an instant I had the whole room flooded with the electric light. There was no one to be seen. The room looked just as it had done when I switched off the light on getting into bed, with this exception—the door was standing wide open and the bolts which I had fastened had been pushed back again. When I had fastened these bolts I had previously insured myself by a careful examination from floor to ceiling that there was no one in the room but myself, and before that I had examined the walls of the room with the aid of a practical builder. I offer no explanation. Nobody can. I simply state facts.

"To the best of your knowledge and belief," added the stout man.

"Of course," said the curate. "Perhaps so distinguished a man of science can help us to a solution." There was a shade of irony in his voice.

"We needn't use so big a word as science," said the doctor.

"The spirit was on the outside, and the bolts were on the inside. It could not enter until the door was unbolted and opened. Then how did it get through to draw back the bolts?"

"Well, I've only to say that the spirit could pass through the closed door."

"In that case why did it draw back the bolts and open the door?"

The curate paused a moment.

"If it were not a supernatural power that drew back the bolts, who was it?"

"It was you yourself."

"What?" the curate exclaimed. "Really this is too preposterous. Perhaps you will tell us exactly how the thing happened. You were not there, but don't let that hinder you."

"I won't," said the doctor good temperedly. "But let me first of all point out that in sleep and in states approaching sleep we lose all right conception of time. A busy man sets an alarm at 6 o'clock, intending to be up at that time. The alarm goes off and more or less fully wakes him. He decides that he will get up in a couple of minutes. He seems to himself to have just begun to doze off, and then, with a sudden spurt of energy, he jumps out of bed. The sound of the alarm is still fresh in his ears, but in a state of sleep he has misjudged the two minutes and finds that they have become two hours. Something similar to that is a not uncommon experience with most men. Now, if I may say so, you are of a nervous temperament, and you had taken this investigation very seriously and earnestly. In a somnambulistic state you got out of bed, unfastened the bolts and opened the door. You then returned to bed. When you awoke suddenly, the sound of the creaking bolts seemed so recent to you that you assigned that as the cause of your waking. Possibly an hour had elapsed, but in sleep one does not judge time accurately. Of course you had and still have no recollection of unfastening the door. That is what one would expect. You switched on the light, and you found things just as you had left them, the bolts drawn back and the door opened."

"But the heavy steps—how do you explain them?"

"You were barely awake, and your mind was in a state of expectant attention. Many men find it difficult to locate sounds and classify them accurately, even when they are wide awake, and there is no preconceived idea to pervert their judgment. You heard something probably—the creaking of a wicker chair or the tapping of the blind at an open window—and your mind converted it into the sound of footsteps."

"But I don't walk in my sleep."

"You sleep in a room alone?"

"Always."

"Then you are not in a position to speak as to that. I'm sorry if it annoys you at all, but there can be no reasonable doubt that you were your own ghost. But if you prefer to believe that a ghost walked straight through a solid door shut and drew back the bolts in order that he might return and walk through it opened you can, you know. Sorry I can't join you."

The curate muttered that there were many things which we could not expect to understand and left the room. —Black and White.

An Eloquent Advocate.

Some years ago, Judge Jeremiah Wilson was defending a contractor accused of defrauding the government, and, as the case developed, the law and the testimony seemed to be closing around his client. But when Mr. Wilson made his appeal to the jury no calendar saint wore a brighter crown of glory than that with which he invested his client. The judge's charge was not auspicious for the defendant, but the jury remained out a surprisingly short time. "We find the defendant not guilty," they reported.

The judge and prosecutor were astonished. Addressing the defendant, the judge said: "Though it is my painful duty to discharge you, I cannot refrain from congratulating you upon having retained so eloquent an advocate." Turning to the jury, the court added: "But it gives me pleasure to discharge you, for a more unconscionable jury never dragged a verdict through a temple of justice."

Newly Furnished Lodging House.

New beds in newly painted and papered rooms at the Courthouse Lodging House. Only one block from the main business street, and but a little more than two blocks from the postoffice. A very quiet locality.

At the last session of the legislature a new law was passed in regard to the collection of taxes, which law took effect on December 1st, 1901, and its substance is as follows:

1. If you pay your taxes on or before March 15th you will be allowed a rebate of three per cent.

2. If you pay your taxes between March 15th and up to and including the first Monday in April there will not be any rebate and neither will there be any penalty or interest added.

3. If your taxes are not paid on or before the first Monday of April, they will become delinquent, when there will be added a penalty of 10 per cent, and the tax will also draw interest at the rate of 12 per cent per annum in addition to the penalty.

4. If you pay one-half of your taxes on or before the first Monday in April then the remaining half may run up to and including the first Monday to October following; but if the last half of tax due is not paid by the first Monday of October, it becomes delinquent, and there will be added to such balance, a penalty of 10 per cent, and in addition, such balance will bear interest at the rate of 12 per cent per annum from the first Monday in April until paid.

5. On all personal property taxes if one-half is not paid on or before the first Monday in April, the law compels the sheriff to levy upon and collect the same after May 1st, hence to prevent a levy upon personal property after May 1st it will be necessary for one-half to be paid as above stated.

6. The law compels the sheriff to sell all lands on which taxes have not been paid, and that such sales shall not be held later than March 1st of the year succeeding the year in which the tax levy is made.

7. The property will be sold to the person bidding the lowest rate of interest, and certificates will be issued therefor, and deeds given to such property sold, unless redeemed within three years from the date of such sale.

The 1901 assessment rolls will be received at the sheriff's office March 1st, 1902. Any written inquiries regarding 1901 taxes received prior to that date will be filed and promptly attended to as soon as the books are open for payment. In making enquiries as to amount of taxes, if possible, give to whom the property is assessed and a description of the same.

THE GIRL AT SMITH'S

By BARRY PAIN.

"Well," he said, continuing his story of his experience in the haunted room in the middle of the night I woke suddenly. The bolts which I had fastened were rattling back again. Then the creak of the door went with a click. I heard heavy steps enter the room. My hand was already on the switch, and in an instant I had the whole room flooded with the electric light. There was no one to be seen. The room looked just as it had done when I switched off the light on getting into bed, with this exception—the door was standing wide open and the bolts which I had fastened had been pushed back again. When I had fastened these bolts I had previously insured myself by a careful examination from floor to ceiling that there was no one in the room but myself, and before that I had examined the walls of the room with the aid of a practical builder. I offer no explanation. Nobody can. I simply state facts.

"To the best of your knowledge and belief," added the stout man.

"Of course," said the curate. "Perhaps so distinguished a man of science can help us to a solution." There was a shade of irony in his voice.

"We needn't use so big a word as science," said the doctor.

"The spirit was on the outside, and the bolts were on the inside. It could not enter until the door was unbolted and opened. Then how did it get through to draw back the bolts?"

"Well, I've only to say that the spirit could pass through the closed door."

"In that case why did it draw back the bolts and open the door?"

The curate paused a moment.

"If it were not a supernatural power that drew back the bolts, who was it?"

"It was you yourself."

"What?" the curate exclaimed. "Really this is too preposterous. Perhaps you will tell us exactly how the thing happened. You were not there, but don't let that hinder you."

"I won't," said the doctor good temperedly. "But let me first of all point out that in sleep and in states approaching sleep we lose all right conception of time. A busy man sets an alarm at 6 o'clock, intending to be up at that time. The alarm goes off and more or less fully wakes him. He decides that he will get up in a couple of minutes. He seems to himself to have just begun to doze off, and then, with a sudden spurt of energy, he jumps out of bed. The sound of the alarm is still fresh in his ears, but in a state of sleep he has misjudged the two minutes and finds that they have become two hours. Something similar to that is a not uncommon experience with most men. Now, if I may say so, you are of a nervous temperament, and you had taken this investigation very seriously and earnestly. In a somnambulistic state you got out of bed, unfastened the bolts and opened the door. You then returned to bed. When you awoke suddenly, the sound of the creaking bolts seemed so recent to you that you assigned that as the cause of your waking. Possibly an hour had elapsed, but in sleep one does not judge time accurately. Of course you had and still have no recollection of unfastening the door. That is what one would expect. You switched on the light, and you found things just as you had left them, the bolts drawn back and the door opened."

"But the heavy steps—how do you explain them?"

"You were barely awake, and your mind was in a state of expectant attention. Many men find it difficult to locate sounds and classify them accurately, even when they are wide awake, and there is no preconceived idea to pervert their judgment. You heard something probably—the creaking of a wicker chair or the tapping of the blind at an open window—and your mind converted it into the sound of footsteps."

"But I don't walk in my sleep."

"You sleep in a room alone?"

"Always."

"Then you are not in a position to speak as to that. I'm sorry if it annoys you at all, but there can be no reasonable doubt that you were your own ghost. But if you prefer to believe that a ghost walked straight through a solid door shut and drew back the bolts in order that he might return and walk through it opened you can, you know. Sorry I can't join you."

The curate muttered that there were many things which we could not expect to understand and left the room. —Black and White.
