THE AFFAIR OF BUNKER, THE BOOKKEEPER

The boys in the broker's office always had made a butt of Bunker. Bunker was the bookkeeper, taciturn and rather solemn looking at all times. The boys called him "the old man." Bunker was forty, and "the boys" were twenty-one or thereabouts. All sorts of jokes were played on old Bunker, but he never showed the slightest sign of resentment. If any of the shafts of weak witticisms which were hurled at him day in and day out pricked, there was no wincing. The cubs finally came to the conclusion that Bunker was dense physically and mentally. How this may have been nobody perhaps but Bunker himself knew definitely, but he was a good bookkeeper, and that was as far as the real old man of the office cared to inquire.

The office was on the twelfth floor, and its windows looked out over the roof of a low building and stared into the twelfth story windows of a big building just beyond. Teddy Long, the office masher, had a desk at one window. Teddy frequently was more occupied with the office behind the windows in the twelfth story of the building beyond than he was with the business in his own office. It was a law firm that held the premises opposite, and the lawyers were known to the boys in the broker's office for the frequency with which they changed their typewriting staff. About once a month a new face, and always a pretty one, would appear in front of the machine back of the legal windows. One morning Teddy Long cast his eyes across the way, and there he saw a new face behind the big window pane. As he told the other boys a few minutes after, this new face had all the attributes that had gone before "heat to death."

"She's a daisy, fellows," said Teddy. "When you get a chance, go to the window and spy a look over there. She's got black hair, snapping eyes, red cheeks and a daisy figure."

All at once the charmer looked up and smiled, showing a set of even white teeth in a framework of scarlet. Teddy smiled back and nodded almost imperceptibly. There was a very decided bow in return, and Teddy went soaring. Instantly, however, the young woman turned again to her machine, and her white fingers went flying nimbly over the keys. Though she might be a bit given to flirting, the young woman apparently did not mean that the little weakness should divert her mind too long from her work.

Teddy half wheeled his chair around, the pleasurable little excitement still glowing within him. There at the next window stood old Bunker, the bookkeeper, with a face as red as a peony and standing first on one foot and then on the other.

"Great Scott!" said Teddy to himself. "The old man had his eyes on the charmer and thought she meant that smile for him! He looks as though he were going to faint. That smile for him! Why, the poor old geezer, he's addle pated! I'll put the boys next."

So Teddy told the boys of how the girl had smiled on him and how the old man thought the smile was intended for him and had blushed like a girl and fiddled with his fingers. "We'll have some fun with the old guy, fellows. I'm going to get an introduction to the girl over the way, and I'll tell her all about Bunker and how if a woman speaks to him he has a fit, and she can just lead him on a bit, and we'll have all sorts of fun here with the doling."

The next day there was another sweet smile from the typewriter, and Teddy responded in kind. Curiously enough, old Bunker was at the other window again, and when that smile came across the airway he blushed like fire and cast a furtive glance at Teddy. Teddy saw it. "We've got him going," he said to himself. "The old fellow's hit sure. I hope he doesn't die of apoplexy before he makes out the pay roll. He looks as though he were going to choke."

So it went on for weeks. Teddy met the charmer occasionally and sent her into ecstasies of laughter over the accounts of the fun they were having with old Bunker.

"Why, when you smile," he said to her, "the old man goes up into the nineteenth heaven. I'm glad you smiled over at me that morning, for office work now is as good as a show."

One morning Bunker showed up with a red carnation in his buttonhole. When Teddy looked through the window, he saw that there was a bunch of the same kind of flowers pinned to the waist of the neighbor over the way. After Bunker had received his morning smile Teddy spread the news of the flowers. "The old man's got 'em bad," he said.

Bunker went on his vacation, and the smiling face was also missing from the window in the lawyer's office. The Wednesday morning following Bunker's departure every man in the office found a square envelope on his desk which when opened contained an announcement reading like this:

Mr. and Mrs. Joel Halbert announce the marriage of their daughter Mary to Mr. Henry Bunker Monday, Oct. 7, at St. Christopher's church.

One envelope contained a second enclosure. It was that which was addressed to Teddy Long. Teddy read the marriage announcement with staring eyes and, then, picking up the enclosure, read this neatly typewritten communication:

Mr. Bunker and I have known each other for five years. We were engaged for five months before I went to work in the lawyer's office. I can't conceive how anybody could be such a fool as to try to grab off a smile that wasn't intended for him. MARY HALBERT BUNKER.—Chicago Record-Herald.

DEPTH OF A RAINFALL.

The Method by Which It is Accurately Measured.

Probably one question that has puzzled the lay mind is how the depth of a rainfall may be accurately determined. The way it is done is this:

A funnel whose larger aperture represents a surface of 100 square inches is placed in a position where it may catch the direct fall of the rain, with the rim of the funnel extending perhaps an inch or more beyond the platform to which it may be fixed. This is for the purpose of preventing any rain from being washed into the funnel and increasing the true fall. From this funnel the water runs to a tube which bears an exact and carefully determined ratio to the area of the funnel's mouth, say one-tenth.

If, therefore, the tube shows water to the depth of an inch, it is clear that one-tenth of an inch of rain has fallen. The tube is provided with a carefully graduated scale so that the fall may be readily seen. Three inches of rain would show a depth of 30 inches in a tube one-tenth the size of the receiving aperture, and the decimals of an inch could be quickly noted by observing the scale.

If placed on the roof of a building, the apparatus should be kept away from the edges to prevent any peculiar slant of the wind carrying into the funnel a larger proportion of rain than would fall into it under normal conditions. The larger the aperture of the receiving funnel is made the more accurate will be the results obtained.

A curious fact that has been noted in connection with rainfalls is that gauges placed on roofs usually gather less water than those placed on the ground. This is accounted for on the theory that the rain in falling absorbs some of the moisture of the air, and the greater distance it falls the larger will be the bulk of the individual drops.—New York Herald.

THE DEER'S HORNS.

They Present all the Phenomena of Animal and Vegetable Growth.

Why and how is the deer so peculiarly unlike any other of the bovine race, the horn differing so materially from all the horned cattle in its composition, growth, maturity and decline? It presents all the phenomena of animal and vegetable growth. It sprouts from the brain without any prolongation of the frontal bone. It rises and breaks through the sinews and takes root on the bone, growing the same as a vegetable. It is nourished by and secretes albumen upon the surface and disposes of the fibrine the same as an animal.

It is clothed with a skin and hairy coat very different from that on the rest of the body. This covering and hair possess a property unknown in any other animal bodies—that of being a styptic to staunch its own blood when wounded. It carries marks of the age on the buck by putting out an extra branch each year, which shows an additional power each year to produce them. And this power does not exist in the female. So this difference is more distinctly marked than in any other class of animals. Again, the horn possesses properties unknown in any other animal matter. It is entirely inodorous, capable of resisting putrefaction and almost impervious to the effects of the atmosphere.

And still water at 300 degrees F. will dissolve these horns readily, even though they are not soluble in alcohol and resist the action of acids and alkalis. It is the only vegetable substance that we know of that does not perpetuate itself by procreation. The male and the female are sustained by the same nutrition and elements, and the male only produces horns. This phenomenon is quite as much of a curiosity as the absence of the horn in the buck after shedding.

The Dramatic in Life.

The undying interest which is taken in the theater is explained by the very profound line with which Shakespeare began a very silly speech, "All the world's a stage." People as a rule take no interest in anything that is not dramatically (or, as in the case of politics, melodramatically) formulated. Any creed to be popular must be dramatically stated. Therefore the gospels are preferred to the epistles. Aesop's fables are remembered because they are the truth about things stated dramatically and morally.—F. G. Bernard Shaw.

An Armless Wonder.

Bulwer in his "Artificial Changeling" makes mention of one John Simons, a native of Berkshire, England, born without arms or hands, who could write with his mouth, thread a needle, tie a knot, shuffle, cut and deal a pack of cards, etc. This wonderful personage was exhibited in London in 1658.

It is a mystery why women endure backache, headache, nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, fainting and dizzy spells when thousands have proved that Electric Bitters will quickly cure such troubles. "I suffered for years with kidney trouble," writes Phoebe Cherley, or Peterson, Ia., "and a lame back pained me so I could not dress myself, but Electric Bitters wholly cured me, and, although 73 years old, I now am able to do all my household work." Start Girls Right!

Many beautiful girls become invalids for life, because at the crucial period of puberty they pay no attention to the laws of health. Mothers should protect their daughters' health by giving them necessary information and proper treatment. When the menses come on a girl unawares in her experience she is either frightened into convulsions, or scared into trying to check the flow. Many girls have checked the flow and it has never started again. And as a result they have grown pale-faced, with "crow-tracks" on their cheeks, and dark hal-moons under their eyes. A dose of taken every morning after a girl is twelve years old will bring the menses on properly and keep them regular. It will help her to develop into attractive womanhood and equip her for the duties of wife and motherhood. All druggists sell $1.00 bottles of Wine of Cardui.

The Hollywood, Ashbury Park, N. J., February 9, 1900. I read your advertisement in regard to Wine of Cardui in the Baltimore American, and it so favorably impressed me that on my visit to Baltimore during the holidays I purchased a bottle of it for my adopted daughter, who was suffering with female troubles. She had been under the doctor's care for some time, and when her periods would come on her suffering was something terrible. I induced her to try it, and the first dose brought on her menses. She took it regularly according to the directions, and was greatly relieved. To use her own words, "It saved my life." J. WISLEY CROSS.
