IN ROYALTY'S SHADOW

By Frank H. Sweet

Copyright, 1902, by the S. S. McClure Company

As he stumbled down the steps he almost ran into the postman. With a muttered apology he was brushing past when the postman touched his arm.

"A letter for you, Mr. Wyatt," he said.

The young man took it mechanically and slipped it into his pocket, not noticing as he did so that it had been forwarded from the Raleigh.

Two weeks before he had been a guest at the Raleigh. Now he was leaving a small back room on C street because he could no longer pay the rent.

But as he turned the corner and went up the avenue his pace began to slacken. He had nowhere to go, so there was no haste. Presently he took out the letter for want of better occupation and carelessly tore off one end.

"Well, I don't know," returned the postman doubtfully. "That letter much for such a suit, and you're a stranger."

"It is plenty for only one hour's use," Wyatt said, "and, as I am a stranger, I will leave my watch as security until I return the suit. You would hardly let it during the next hour."

"No, I suppose not. If you're sure to get it back so I can let it for tonight, I wouldn't mind. Still you leave security. Yes, I guess you may take it."

There was a large crowd about the New Willard, but it opened readily to let the prince's suit pass through, and not a few admiring glances rested upon the tall, soldierly figure which walked at some distance behind his companions.

Inside the hotel he loitered for some moments near the door gazing at the people outside. After his companions had registered and been assigned to their apartments he seemed to awaken to the tardiness and went forward to the desk, signing the name "Fritz."

In big, round characters. Then he raised his hand impudently to a complacent looking gentleman who stood near the obsequious clerk and who appeared to be the manager or proprietor of the house.

"Will you be so kind as to direct me to some bank in the neighborhood where I can obtain exchange?" he asked.

"I neglected."

The man stepped in front of the clerk, his face wreathed in smiles.

"Any bank would be delighted, Herr—er—Baron Fritz," he answered, with a low bow, "but if you would permit me the accommodation I would be only too delighted to make the advance. His royal highness 'Baron' Fritz raised his hand deprecatingly.

"His royal highness, or, rather, our ambassador, would attend to all such matters, of course, but this is a private affair of my own. You Americans have been so kind that I do not like to tax your courtesy."

"But I assure you, Baron, it will give me the greatest pleasure in the world," eagerly. "I am delighted to have the opportunity. How much shall it be—a thousand, two thousand?"

"No, no, Herr Proprietor; you are too generous. I will soon get my exchange into your money. But just now, to save the inconvenience of going out, I will accept—er—er—it is so hard to reckon in your money—say, $50. Thank you! No more," as the money was counted and passed to him and more offered for his acceptance.

"Now, if you will tell me the way to the—er—what you call—barber shop?"

"Certainly. This way will show you."

When he left the barber's chair ten minutes later, the soldierly figure in resplendent German uniform did not return to the office, but passed directly to the street.

Three days later the manager of the New Willard hotel received a certified check for $50 from a bank in Texas, and with it was a short explanatory note from a man who signed himself "Fritz Wyatt."

The blue eye indicates love and sentiment. This eye belongs to the temperate or colder regions and is associated with temperate character. It may glow with love, but it never burns with that consuming flame which marks the torrid black. It has amiable dispositions and tastes that are refined, is mentally active and usually of a versatile intellect. The light eyed races have always attained a higher degree of civilization than the dark ones, and that which holds true of nations will be found the same in individuals.

The eyes which borrow their tint from the summer sky dazzle and bewilder, whether flashing in scorn or melting in sorrow. The large blue eye is the type of purity and peace and thrills the heart at a single glance. It has a meaning that you can never forget and an expression which tells of the trusting heart. It is the eye which haunts the lover's dream and has perhaps been praised by poets more than any other color. Even the passionless Wordsworth has told us:

"These eyes, soft and capacious as a cloudless sky, whose azure depths their color enshrouds, must needs be conversant with upward looks—prayer's voiceless service."

Duchess Versus Lord Chancellor.

The English house of lords has never been particularly kind to its fair visitors. Long ago, in the days when duchesses sold their kisses for votes, the house of lords forbade them to enter, and a battle royal ensued between the ladies and the peers. The lord chancellor had sworn that he would not let them in, and the Duchess of Queensberry had sworn that ladies should come in. "This being reported," we read in an old diary, "the peers resolved to starve them out. An order was made that the doors should not be opened till they had raised their siege."

These amazons now showed themselves qualified for the duty even of foot soldiers. They stood there till 5 in the afternoon without either sustenance or intermission, every now and then playing volleys of thumps, kicks and raps against the door with so much violence that the speakers in the house were scarcely heard. At last, by strategy worthy of a general, the ladies "all rushed in and placed themselves in the front row of the gallery," where they remained till an hour before midnight, applauding or hissing to their hearts' content.
