GETTING EVEN WITH PAXTON

By MARY WOOD

Copyright, 1927, by the S. S. McClure Company

Gerald Hastings watched Frank Paxton's retreating form till the latter turned down Oak street. Then he clutched fiercely the little hand that crept into his and turned to its owner. "You don't love him, do you, Dot?" he asked earnestly.

She made a moue. "You foolish boy!" she laughed. "How many times must I tell you that I love you, and you only? Mr. Paxton is a very entertaining young gentleman, and we are all very glad to have him come here as frequently as he does, especially papa."

Gerald gritted his teeth. "Especially papa?" he said angrily. "Naturally he prefers the cashier of the First National bank to the operator of the Western Union company at $15 a week."

She laid a dainty hand across his lips. "You mustn't speak that way, Gerald," she said demurely. "Remember, he is my father and may be yours some day."

He caught her eagerly in his arms. "Tell me, Dot," he said earnestly, "is there really all this hope for me?"

She looked into his face with innocent, trusting eyes. "If I don't marry you, I won't marry any one," she promised.

"Well," he said, releasing her, "if Paxton doesn't keep away from here, I'm going to have trouble with him one of these days."

Dorothy laughed, but there was an undercurrent of seriousness in her voice as she said: "You mustn't talk that way, Gerald. It's foolish and unnecessary. You must remember that papa is a heavy stockholder in the bank and that Mr. Paxton is a protégé of Mr. Spencer, the president, who has asked father to be particularly kind to him. Mr. Paxton is a very charming young man, but has never made it evident that he wants to marry me."

"Except by coming round about five nights a week," supplemented Hastings.

"Well," she laughed, "you always outstay him, and—"

"And to the victor belong the spoils," finished Gerald, making his meaning clear. There was the front of skirts, and as Dorothy disappeared within Hastings stroiled down the quiet village street.

Matters had been tacitly understood between him and Dorothy for a long time, and when he had obtained the position as operator at the depot he had hoped soon to be able to make her his wife. Then the First National bank was established in Tabor, and to the surprise of everybody, Almon Spencer, who had been elected president, appointed Frank Paxton as cashier. The action had excited no little comment for Paxton was a New Yorker, and Tabor felt that the position should have gone to a local man. Gerald had at first hoped to secure the place himself, and now it seemed to him that Paxton had cut him out of everything. A fierce desire for vengeance filled his heart as he made his way homeward.

His feelings had not changed the next morning when he took his seat at the telegraph desk. Tabor was a comparatively small town, and most of the business was on railroad affairs, few local messages being sent or received. After he had reported the 9:10 down train there was little to be done for more than an hour, and he busied his brain devising some means for overcoming his rival.

He and Dorothy had been lovers almost since childhood, and to lose her to a city man seemed doubly bad.

He was awakened from his reverie by the appearance of the janitor of the bank, who deposited on the ledge a coin and a yellow telegraph blank.

"Mr. Spencer says to send that at once, please," this as Gerald mechanically counted the words. The latter's heart throbbed with sudden fierce satisfaction, for the message read:

William W. Birdsall, Bank Examiner, Albany, N. Y.: Can you come up at once? Paxton has gone wrong. ALMON P. SPENCER.

For more than two hours Gerald went through his work automatically. A delicious joy filled his heart at the thought that his rival was driven from the field. The revolution came at 1 o'clock with the return message: Almon P. Spencer, Tabor, N. Y.: I suspected as much. Will be up to-night. WILLIAM W. BIRDSALL.

He sent the message up to the bank by one of the boys, but not with the satisfaction he felt when he received the first message. After all, Paxton, in spite of the fact that he was his rival, was a pleasant fellow, with a kindly word for all. It would be a terrible thing to be arrested for such a betrayal of trust.

The rules of the Western Union are strict on the matter of giving out information relative to dispatches, and the thought that such a revelation would mean the sacrifice of his position deterred him for awhile. But in the end sympathy for his discomfited rival proved too strong.

There was a train to New York at 5. The up train from Albany did not get in till 8.

The station agent was familiar with Hastings' duties and readily consented to take care of the office till he came back. He went to the bank and straight to the cashier's window, behind which stood Paxton, getting ready to close the office for the day.

"Come out here a moment," said Gerald hoarsely. "I want to say something."

Wonderingly Paxton followed him to the front of the lobby.

"It's costing me my job," said Gerald, "and I've no particular reason for feeling grateful to you, but you ought to know about these two telegrams." And with trembling hands he unfolded copies of the dispatches.

Paxton laughed, and then his face softened.

"It's awfully good of you, old chap," he said, "but I know about those messages. The fact is I'm engaged to Judge Birdsall's ward, and Mr. Spencer as my guardian is to formally announce it tonight. It's been an open secret, but I was waiting until her eighteenth birthday, which is today, and that's why those joking telegrams were sent. And, by the way, if you're going to see Miss Dorothy tonight, if you'll forgive the impertinence, you might tell her that your prospects are very materially improved, for I understand that you are slated for the position I am about to give up. I go to New York."

Dorothy said "I told you so," but her father said "Yes."

Poe and the French.

The keener appreciation in Europe of literature as a fine art is no doubt the main reason why Poe is looked upon over there as our most noteworthy poet. Poe certainly had a more consummate art than any other American singer, and his productions are more completely the outcome of that art. They are literary feasts. "The Raven" was as deliberately planned and wrought out as is any piece of mechanism. Its inspiration is verbal and technical. "The truest poetry is most feigning," says Touchstone, and this is mainly the conception of poetry that prevails in European literary circles. Poe's poetry is artistic feigning, like good acting. It is to that extent disinterested. He does not speak for himself, but for the artistic spirit. He has never been popular in this country, for the reason that art, as such, is far less appreciated here than abroad. The stress of life here is upon the moral and intellectual elements much more than upon the aesthetic. We demand a message of the poet or that he shall teach us how to live. Poe had no message but that of art. He made no contribution to our stock of moral ideas; he made no appeal to the conscience or manhood of the race; he did not touch the great common workaday mind of our people. He is more akin to the Latin than to the Anglo-Saxon; hence his deepest impression seems to have been made upon the French mind.—John Burroughs in Century.

A Cap For Him.

An amusing story is told of a certain fussy and quarrelsome man who is fond of threatening lawsuits and actions for damages on every possible pretext and who is also not averse to taking mean advantage of his fellows.

On a recent occasion his hat was slightly damaged by something accidentally dropped from the window of a neighbor's house. The fact was set forth in an indignant letter from the fussy person, who demanded that the hat should be replaced by a new one, a decidedly modest request, seeing that the original hat was old and shabby, while the injury to it could have been easily repaired.

The recipient of the letter, however, in a humorous gentlemanly well acquainted with the weaknesses of his correspondent. Instead of waxing indignant at the impudence of the demand he wrote a playful reply, explaining that times were hard, money scarce and new hats at a premium. He hoped, however, that as he could not furnish the aggrieved party with a new head covering he would accept the material for one. And he inclosed a sheet of foolscap!—London Tit-Bits.

When John Was In Doubt.

John was a coachman who took life most seriously and, being very particular, would return frequently in the course of the day to make sure he understood the orders that had been given him in the morning. One afternoon he presented himself before his mistress and began:

"Mrs. T. Of'm not quite certain ez to Mr. T.'s order this mornin'. Oi was drovin' him to the theatre, an' he told me to do something to him, mum; but sure Oi don't know whether he told me to shoe him or to shoot him. Mebbe ye can tell me."

A shoeing was evidently required, but the execution of the order and likewise of the horse was deferred until Mr. T. returned.

City Property for Sale

HENDRICKS' ADDITION TO EUGENE.—To those desiring to purchase city lots, I have laid out an addition on the south side of the city and north of College Hill Park. I have 120 lots in this addition, and am selling them very low so as to enable every one to have a home of their own. The price of these lots is from $50 up.

ELIAS STEWART ADDITION TO EUGENE.—I have some very desirable lots in this addition, in the very heart of the city and within a few blocks of Willamette street.

WHITEAKER'S ADDITION TO EUGENE.—I have a few lots in this addition within two blocks of the First National Bank.

COLLEGE HILL PARK.—I have 100 lots in this addition. The price now is $50 each. We will advance the price soon. We expect College Hill Park to become the most desirable residence property in or near the city.

HENDRICKS' ADDITION TO COLLEGE HILL PARK.—We have 70 lots for sale cheap in this addition; also 40 or 50 acres of very choice fruit land. I have on this place 1300 young fruit trees, about 400 Bartlett pear trees, and 200 black walnut trees, also apples, plums and small fruits. This place has a good farm house, barn and out-houses, and is a most beautiful suburban piece of property. It is known as the Locust Hill farm, and there is no place in the state more beautifully and pleasantly situated.

I am not in real estate business as a business—we sell our own lands only. I employ no agents. Any one desiring to purchase any of this property will find me at the First National Bank. I will be pleased to show property and give prices. I might exchange some of this property for good timber land. Come and see me.
