KALIKAI of HILO

By MARY WOOD
Copyright, 1902.
By the S. S. McClure Company

The applause had not yet died away. Across the footlights the slender figure of the Hawaiian leader still bowed in acknowledgment. Animated, eager, he furnished a curious contrast to the apathy of his fellow singers. His dark eyes rapidly scanned the circling tiers. Slowly, slowly, the light of expectancy died from his face. He shrank back, and the contrast was gone. He had sunk to their level, a paid singer in a foreign land.

The strident instruments twanged. The picturesque figures in snowy white and red sashes swung slightly to the plaintive melody as they sang, always softly, always as an echo from a far-away land.

Kalikai sang listlessly. The glare of the footlights hurt his eyes. He coughed occasionally, and a dull pain woke in his chest. But worse than physical discomfort was the ache at his heart. This audience of cold, unfeeling people —how he hated them! This cold and bleak country—how he hated it! Oh, for the sunshine and the flowers, the dancing and the light laughter of his island home!

His face softened as he thought of it—the blue sea foaming against jagged rocks, the blue sky cut by peaks as jagged, the rustling palm trees above the gleam of yellow sand, the scents of the warm night and the dancers wreathed in flowers. One of them, a dark eyed girl, had hung a wreath round his neck. She loved him. He had thought he loved her, but that was before the other came.

He was singing alone now, and an unconscious feeling crept into his voice. The song was the same he had sung over a year ago to the fair American girl. He had taught her the song, and she had taught him what love was. Again he was bending nearer and nearer, while his eyes told the story his lips dared not speak. Then the bitter year of seeking! Ah, he would remember only the golden days that came before!

He was silent as the others echoed the refrain softly, and his ear caught a rustle in one of the boxes. Mechanically his eyes followed the sound. A party of three had just entered—a gray haired, distinguished looking man, a plump, comfortable matron and a third. Kalikai trembled. He knew them all. And the third, the golden haired girl, was the lady of his dreams. Even as he looked her eyes, as if attracted, met his, and a quick wave of color rose to the masses of curls. She recognized him, was glad to see him!

Again he must sing. As he began the Hawaiians turned in surprise. Listlessness and hesitancy were forgotten with the audience. He sang for her, and his eyes never left her face. His voice was vibrant with tenderness as he sang of the weary search, glad and triumphant as he sang of the joy of meeting.

The last notes swelled into silence. But a woman's cry of terror rang out above the applause. Kalikai had fallen forward on his face, and there was a splash of scarlet on the white of his blouse. As they rang the curtain down the golden haired girl heard a voice say: "That's the way all the poor fellows go when they come over here. Consumption gets them sooner or later."

She had risen and was speaking softly, impudently: "Father, don't you recognize him? It is Kalikai, the young Hawaiian who was so good to us at Hilo. And years ago he taught me that very song. He was so kind to me there when we were strangers in his land, and here he knows no one, and he is ill." Her voice choked, but she went on eagerly: "We must go to him. We may be able to do something for him. No, no! We won't wait. We must go at once, or we may be too late."

She always had been a spoiled child, and so at last they yielded to her wish. And that is why when Kalikai woke as from a troubled sleep and murmured "Allee!" her face bent over him. She pressed a glove to his lips as she said, with a tremulous smile, "Drink."

He did not look at her, and again swift color flashed into her cheeks. Yet even as he looked a shadow fell across his face, for she had changed woefully. It was no longer the girl

Saved From Awful Fate.

"Everybody said I had consumption," writes Mrs. A. M. Shields, of Chambersburg, Pa., "I was so low after six months of severe sickness caused by hay fever and asthma that few thought I could get well, but I learned of the marvelous merit of Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, used it and was completely cured." For desperate throat and lung diseases it is the safest cure in the world and is infallible for cough, colds and bronchial affections. Guaranteed bottles 50c and trial bottles free at W. L. DeLano's.

who had teased and played with him, but a woman whose beauty had somehow hardened in the ripening. There were shadows under the eyes and bitter curves around the mouth that had been absent in his dream pictures. Unconsciously he sighed and closed his eyes. The meeting so long prayed for brought more sadness than joy. Lying there, he did not see her face soften or her eyes shine with tender feeling. With an impetuous movement she bent over and pressed her lips against a lock of the dark hair that lay against the pillow. As she raised her head her face was dyed scarlet with blushes, which faded as her glance fell on a ring on her finger.

She was silent, her hands pressed tightly together.

When at last he opened his eyes and looked at her, she smiled bravely, while her finger motioned him not to speak. Her voice was low, but steady, as she said:

"This is a strange meeting, my friend, after many days, and we have both changed. I have learned many things since we parted. I am married." He started, but she went on hurriedly: "My husband is not here tonight. He seldom is. He is too much absorbed in business. American husbands often are that way. But I am happy, quite happy. My father and mother live with us, and you know how dear they are to me. I am a very fortunate woman. But you—you have changed too. Oh, why did you ever leave your lovely island?"

His eyes told her the reason, but she gave no sign that she could read them. "You were always happy there. I was happy. Every one was happy. But it is not too late for you. You can go back. Promise me that you will go back, and the warm sunshine will make you strong again, and you will forget this country of cold and mist."

He could not see the storm raging beneath her forced composure. He did not guess why she spoke almost curtly. He only thought that she had grown cold and hard. His dream was shattered.

So he went back to Hawaii and the dark eyed girl who was waiting for him. With her he learned to forget even the pang of lost illusion, and the golden haired American became but a pretty memory.

An Old Rosebush.

As long ago as the year 822 Hildehelm is mentioned in history. In that year we are told Louis the Pious, Charlemagne's son and successor, made it the seat of the bishopric intended by his father to be established at the neighboring town of Elze. Less than a century before Charlemagne had brought the heathen Saxons into subjection and Christianity was yet new in the land. Gunther, the first bishop, had been canon at the cathedral at Reims. Three years after his elevation to the new episcopal see he consecrated the first chapel, naming it in honor of the Virgin Mary. The chapel is supposed to have occupied the site under the present cathedral, where the crypt of the new church is built.

A pretty rosebush that now clings to the outer wall of the cathedral choir is said by tradition to have grown there since the days of Louis the Pious himself. In the twelfth century, when the choir and crypt were being enlarged, a protecting hollow wall was built around the rosebush in order that the vine might continue to grow about the building when the new wall had been completed. A bit of the old arching may be seen behind the altar in the crypt. This is the present voucher for the great age of the rosebush, and it must be admitted that many traditions repose upon a less solid foundation.

Thackeray's Ideas of Corsets.

Thackeray, who detested "wasp waisted women," once told a young relative who was much in love to take his betrothed to a physician before purchasing the engagement ring.

"What for?" his companion inquired in considerable astonishment.

"To see whether that wasp waist is an inheritance or a consequence," he replied.

"Consequence?" exclaimed the young man. "What do you mean?"

"Corsets," said Thackeray laconically.

"Miss — has the most beautiful figure in England," said the infatuated lover.

"She is deformed," Thackeray responded. "If it is a natural deformity, she may be a moderately healthy woman. Even humpbacks are not always delicate, you know. Mind, I say moderately healthy. But if that girl's figure is the result of corsets, you might better go and hang yourself rather than risk the evils that will inevitably follow."

Divided Interest.

A prominent San Francisco business man, knowing that his French barber had a pretty taste in music which he occasionally indulged, asked him one morning while being shaved if he had attended the opera of "Romeo and Juliet" the night before. The barber replied that he had, says the San Francisco Wave.

"How did you enjoy it?" asked the business man.

"Not at all, sir," was the barber's unexpected reply. "From my place in the gallery I could see the back of your head below me, and it mortified me to notice that I had not parted your hair straight."
