that I must do something to regain my health. A friend advised your Wine of Cardui treatment so strongly that I decided to try it, although I had little faith in patent medicines. I am now very thankful that I did so, for within ten days blessed relief came to me, and in less than three months I was cured, and have enjoyed fine health ever since. I know there is nothing better for a sick woman who wishes to enjoy perfect health and am very pleased to give my hearty endorsement.

No suffering woman can afford to ignore such a letter as Mrs. McDonald writes. Her plans and advice have proved valuable in building up one of the greatest women's organizations in the United States and she takes time to give advice which she knows will help you. Do not delay in securing this medicine. There is nothing to gain and everything to lose by delay. The choice is before you. Will or will you not secure relief now by taking Wine of Cardui? All druggists sell $1.00 bottles of Wine of Cardui as well as 25c packages of Theodore's Black-Draught.

Knights of Pythias

TRACY R. BANGS.

Supreme Chancellor Tracy R. Bangs of Grand Lodge, N. D., is one of the most able men ever elected to this position. He has been connected with the Knights of Pythias for the past eighteen years and has devoted much time and attention to the order. As supreme representative of the grand lodge of North Dakota entered the supreme lodge in 1880 and served on various committees until 1900, when he was elected supreme vice chancellor. Mr. Bangs was born in 1862 and is one of the leading lawyers of the Sioux State.

The Knights of Pythias of Washington will hold a monster fair in April to procure funds to erect a $45,000 Pythian temple in that city.

There are 250 active lodges in California, with about 15,000 members. The Radbone Sisters of the Golden State have sixty temples, with a membership of about 4,000.

The two daughters of Justice H. Rutledge still reside in Alexandria, Va. These daughters are granted a pension by the supreme lodge during the remainder of their lives or until they change their state of single blessedness to one of wedded bliss.

There are in the Knights of Pythias 7,000 lodges and over 600,000 members, making it one of the strongest fraternal organizations in the world.

Knights of Honor.

The order entered the new year with every published death claim paid.

Each lodge should look carefully to suspensions and if necessary have a committee whose particular duty shall be to call on delinquents and induce them to re-engage.

United American Mechanics.

Within the past six months the order of United American Mechanics, which is often designated as the senior order, has made rapid progress.

At the beginning of last term efforts were put forth to begin the order, and the result has so far been very satisfactory and encouraging.

A VISIT TO AN ARMY

When the Franco-Prussian war broke out, I was studying at a German university, or rather, I had finished my course and was making pedestrian tours over the continent of Europe. One morning after the battle of Gravelotte I wandered into the German lines, hoping to find among the officers some of my former fellow students, but if any of them were there I did not meet them. I was taken to Lieutenant Colonel Schiff, who was what in the United States army we call the provost marshal, to whom I presented my credentials. I was traveling on an old passport that had not been used (endorsed by the proper authority) for some time; but, being an American, with no interest whatever in the contest then raging between France and Germany, I did not consider it necessary to be very careful.

Colonel Schiff took my passport, assuring me that an examination was a mere matter of form, though an imperative duty with him. An officer in his company at the time scanned my face, looked my figure over from head to foot, then said something to Colonel Schiff in a language (not German) that I did not understand. I felt sure it referred to me, but if it did the colonel gave no indication of it. After the officer left in the evening I invited me to be his guest during my stay in the camp.

"I presume," he said to me, "that you wish to see something of the army. I am going to visit several different camps today and will be happy to have you accompany me."

I accepted his offer, and after thanking him for the opportunity, and after furnishing me with a horse, accompanied by a small escort, we sallied forth. The colonel had his duties to perform and often left us to visit different headquarters, paying no attention to me except when disengaged, but I noticed a young officer of the party continually watching me. If I got out my glass to view a distant object, he craned his neck to see what I was looking at; if I took especial interest in a regiment, he seemed equally interested in the fact; if I asked for information, he spurred his horse close enough to the to hear all that was said.

When we returned from the tour, I was dined by the colonel and when I retired was given a room with an army cot in it in which to sleep. I was awakened in the night by the guard changing sentries, and after the roller had passed away, hearing some one walking back and forth, I arose and looked out. There was a sentry pacing before my tent.

"Well," I said, surprised, "these Germans are not inclined to let people get away in the night. But I suppose it is army custom with regard to civilians."

The next morning after breakfast I thanked the colonel for his hospitality and told him that I thought I would take my departure.

"Where do you go from here?" he asked.

"I shall go to Paris, then take a steamer for New York."

I knew nothing about military matters or I should not have thus boldly declared that after inspecting the German army I was going straight to the capital of France. The colonel looked at me strangely. Then a faint shadow of incredulity passed over his face.

"Better stay with us another day," he said. "I have invited a number of officers to dine with you."

Somehow I felt that the invitation was akin to an order. At my rate, I did not feel quite safe in declining. I spent the day at the colonel's headquarters and noticed that whenever I walked beyond the chain of sentinels those between whom I passed kept a critical eye upon me, and once when I went some distance an officer came running after me, politely informing me that no one was allowed to leave the camp without the colonel's pass.

At dinner I was introduced to some fine fellows and enjoyed their society so well that I forgot the espionage to which I had been subjected. During the dinner the colonel was called away, and when he returned his manner toward me had changed entirely. He was less deferential and less constrained. Indeed, for the first time his bearing toward me was natural.

"If you care to rise early," he said to me before I retired, "I will show you an interesting army ceremony. Then, if you choose, you may proceed with your tour."

"I shall be delighted to join you for the ceremony, and I really must proceed as soon as it is over," I replied.

Notwithstanding the change in the colonel's bearing toward me I felt uneasy. There was a drawing down of the corners of his mouth when he used the word "ceremony" that I did not like. I awoke soon after going to sleep and looked out. There was no guard before my tent. I was puzzled. Finally I went to sleep and was awakened at dawn by the colonel's orderly.

Our party rode a short distance and stopped at a barn. A platoon of soldiers were standing at what we call "parade rest." Suddenly the barn door opened, and a man pale as death was led out under guard.

Great heavens! He was the very image of myself.

Here was the explanation of all that had passed. This man was a spy, and I had been mistaken for him.

"We caught him," said the colonel to me, "last night. Had he succeeded in slipping away you would have been in his place this morning, for we were sure you were he."

I did not want to witness the execution, but with the colonel's permission rode back to camp. He was returned, and after he had given me breakfast I was permitted to depart.
