The Exclusion Matter

If Theodore Roosevelt desires to remain in touch with the Pacific coast people he will have to banish his thoughts of allowing the Chinese cheap coolie to enter our gates. Instead of opening our ports to the Chinese let us close them to the laboring world or in a short time we will be overrun.

The Portland Oregonian, always a friend of cheap labor and of the coolie desires to see the bars thrown down because we have lots of work to do. The work is none too plentiful, nor wages too high, and with thousands of coolies, who will work for 40 to 50 cents a day the white laborers will be driven from the coast. Is this the condition we are seeking? The Pacific coast had a taste of this once and doesn't want another dose of it soon.

Notice to Contractors

GREAT ORATORY.

From Oregon State Journal

The arguments of ex-Judge A. S. Bennett, and ex-Senator John M. Thurston in defense of Senator John H. Mitchell, last Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, June 29 and 30, and July 1, are reported to have been the most eloquent, ingenious and powerful in any criminal court in Oregon, and perhaps seldom, if ever, surpassed in the United States or elsewhere. Each occupied whole days and filled whole pages of the Daily Oregonian with the stenographic reports of their speeches. Both are lawyers and orators of great ability, and each surpassed himself and covered himself with glory. Each pictured Mitchell as an angel, or at least almost ready to become one, being just about ready to totter bodily into the grave, while his pure spirit climbs the golden stairs; blameless, persecuted and wronged beyond anything recorded in history; poor and poverty stricken; having lived in one room containing nothing but his trunk, and having waded through the snow to serve his constituents, free of charge, while other Senators lived in palaces and rolled in carriages, as Senator Thurston painted it. The picture was so heartrending that Senator Mitchell broke down for the first time during the trial and wept, and nearly everybody in the court room cried. Mitchell had done no wrong and it was astonishing that he should have been indicted on such charges. The indictment was ridiculous, charging that he had received money from Kribs, when the evidence showed that Kribs did not pay any money to Mitchell but only checks to Tanner and Tanner sold the checks to the bank, and the bank could have burned them up or done what it pleased with them, so that money was paid by the banks and not by Kribs as was charged in the indictment, etc. The ingenuity of the pleading was equalled only by the eloquence, according to the report. "The cleanest man from a momentary standpoint that ever served in the Senate of his country," declared Thurston. He pictured Mitchell in Washington, "lonely and old and poor and deserted, without support or sympathy or tenderness," a 'boarding house senator,' which only those could understand who have witnessed the luxury in which other senators live in the national capital." Mitchell was much better and everybody else so much worse, especially Robinson and Kribs and everybody connected with the prosecution, than either saint or sinner had dreamed, that the court room was flooded with tears. It was a master appeal to the sympathies of everybody present. Those who could not be present to hear it lost the opportunity of their lives. It completely nonsuited and put the prosecution out of court for the time being, and perhaps made them feel ashamed and sorry for the great wrongs they had done.

The arguments of District Attorney Francis J. Heney were also eloquent, masterly and brilliant, but dealt more with the evidence, the law and the facts, and less with imagery and sympathy, than did those of the lawyers for Mitchell, as shown by the stenographic report. He is undoubtedly a man of great power, unequalled as a prosecutor by anything that has ever taken place in Oregon. After Thurston had spoken nearly two days and closed Saturday with the most touching appeal ever heard in Oregon, Heney commenced his closing speech Saturday afternoon, but did not finish and the court adjourned until Monday, when he will close and the case will go to the jury. Mr. Heney resumed his argument for the prosecution last Monday forenoon and had not finished when the court adjourned at noon. At 2 o'clock he continued for a little more than 30 minutes, and about 3 o'clock Judge De Haven commenced reading his charge to the jury, which was quite lengthy. A little before midnight the jury brought in a verdict of guilty as charged in the indictments. Senator Thurston gave notice of a request for a new trial. After that has been overruled then an appeal will no doubt be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States
