Note and Comment

The city dog law provides a fine against the owner in case he gets a license for his dog. L. Bonney, the poundmaster, moralizing on the peculiarity of man's nature when the dog is involved, says he can threaten the dog owner with the law making the man personally responsible for the tax, and all is taken meekly and in good part, but let the owner get the idea that the dog is to be proceeded against and there is a row at once. He thinks not a few men would fight for their dogs as soon as for their wives—some sooner.

Two Chicago men attempted to blackmail Armour and are in jail for thirty days. Yet that same Armour, with his colossal crimes of corners and combinations in wheat and pork, ruining thousands upon thousands of men and bringing untold suffering and misery to countless wives and children all over the country, goes courted, unwhipped of justice. For such men the good old redhot, orthodox hell bill is the bill exactly.

A Jolly Football Song

I. In a private ward I mean, thinking mother dear of you,
And the trip I'll soon be taking in a hearse.
And the tears fill up my eyes, in spite of all that I can do,
While I try to join the doctor and the nurse.

Chorus:
Tramp, tramp, tramp, we're playing football!
Yonder guard has lost his ear,
With a dozen well-meant kicks we'll be wadded o'er the styx—
Do you think the game is brutal, mother dear.

II. Near the centre rush I stood when the first fierce plunge was made,
And they plucked me until I fell entirely blind;
When I go away from here I'll be sorry mother dear,
That I have to leave my eyes and teeth behind.

Chorus:
Tramp, tramp, tramp, we're playing football!
Watch them grind us in the loam;
I have made my last five yards, give old Oregon my regards,
I am going to the football players' home.

The End.
