AN INDEPENDENT PAPER.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 3

There is rivalry between two streets at Aberdeen, Washington, that will cost not a few of the business people some pretty money. Contracts have been let for two theatres, each to cost $25,000. With not enough business to justify one, both will prove big money losers. Not satisfied with the rivalry they are having plans drawn for two hotels, one near each theatre. The 1900 census gave the town less than four thousand population.

Hard on Women and Mules

A traveler in the mountain country of East Tennessee stopped one noon at a cabin, says the New York Sun. In the shade of the house sat a comfortable-looking, middle aged man, apparently at leisure. A dozen dogs lapped about him.

"Can I have dinner here?" asked the traveler.

"I reckon so," drawled the man, "when the old woman turns up."

The "old woman" came in after a while, leading a weary-looking mule and wiping perspiration from beneath her big sunbonnet. She split some wood, built a fire, fetched some water, and soon had dinner ready.

"You have a fine country here," said the traveler, as they sat down to the meal.

"Stranger," said the woman, "I reckon it's about as fine as they is for men and dogs, but it's mighty hard on women and mules."
