AN INDEPENDENT PAPER.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 2

The men that faced Confederate bullets are going fast. During the six months ending January 1st, 26,234 pensioners died. There are a few over six hundred thousand left.

Mrs. Charles T. Yerkes, only one-month widow and the recipient of $7,500,000 under her late husband's will, has become the bride of William M. Yerkes, of San Francisco. She has seen fifty summers, he twenty-nine.

Occasionally it happens the other way. Bernard Sherry, a white man among his Indian wife at Pendleton for divorce, alleges drunkenness, and that while drunk she is cruel, vile and vicious to him. It would take legions of such cases to even up matters marital.

The Colombian consul general at New York is assured in a dispatch from the president of Colombia that in order to try four conspirators arrested last December for plotting against the republic, "with perfect calmness," a state of siege has been declared for the capital, Bogota—in other words martial law—adding that "absolute tranquillity prevails throughout the country." One may imagine the kind of justice the accused will get.

If Frank Barker, assistant superintendent of Seattle public schools, made the remark attributed to him when safely on land and asked to climb the bluff above the Valencia wreck to give possible assistance, that "I have lost my wife and two children and now I am going to save myself," he should be run out of town—into the bay would, perhaps, fit the case best. "Save" himself? All he was saved by not going was more or less hardship—but just think had some one been on the cliff to make fast the life line, a part at least of the fifty or thereabouts lives that had precarious refuge in the steamer's masts would have been saved!
