DR. MOORE AND WIFE WERE AT SAN FRANCISCO

Dr. Chas. E. Moore and wife, formerly residing on the McKenzie stock farm, several miles east of Springfield, passed through Eugene on one of the late trains last evening on the way from San Francisco to their home at Seattle. They related to their friends at the depot during the two or three minutes that the train stopped some thrilling experiences of the earthquake and fire. They were in the downtown district at the time the shock came and had a number of narrow escapes from death.

A Jack Rabbit Race

Messrs. W. J Johnson, Henry Veatch and Henry Farming were out near Saginaw last Sunday with Mr. Farming's two hound dogs and there saw one of the most exciting races they ever witnessed. The dogs ran the rabbit for about one and one-half miles, but the last stretch of about half a mile was in the open and there seemed to be no advantage to either dogs or rabbit, but when the fence was reached the rabbit dodged one of the dogs and fell into the mouth of the other one, which was a few feet behind. The men who saw the race say that while it was not long it was very exciting. Mr. Veatch had with him a .22 rifle, and a rabbit jumped up and Henry fired five shots and struck it three times, which he thinks is good shooting when a rabbit is running.—Cottage Grove Western Oregon.

MANY S. P. TRAINS ARE DELAYED

South Bound Train From Portland Over Seven Hours Late This Morning

Southern Pacific trains are running irregularly on account of the delay caused in California by the earthquake. The trains due here from the south yesterday morning at 3 o'clock and in the afternoon at 12:42 came through in three sections between 8 and 10 o'clock last night. No. 15, the midnight southbound overland, did not reach Eugene until 9:20 o'clock this morning. No train could be started out of Portland last night because of lack of equipment. It was necessary to wait till the delayed trains from the south arrived. The first section of No. 16, the 3 o'clock northbound overland, came through on time this morning, but the second section did not arrive until after 10 o'clock.

At the Theatres

"MACBETH."

Frederick Warde's appearance at the Eugene theatre Tuesday evening in his lecture and recital of the Shakespearean historical tragedy of Macbeth can well be said to have been the one treat of the season in that line.

It has been seventeen years since the famous tragedian played "Hamlet" in the old Parker opera house here, and many who heard him at that time were again present last evening to hear his improved and excellent work in Macbeth. In his simple rendering of the drama Mr. Warde presented his characters to the audience, more especially those of Macbeth and Lady Macbeth more plainly than they usually appear in beautifully staged plays.

"Shakespeare controlled the galleries," as the small boys therein were the most attentive of listeners. In the admiration of the cultured audience on the floor and the absorbed attention of the gallery we see that the eminent actor has clearly justified his course in leaving the stage for the position of a reader and lecturer.

Shakespeare presented directly, vividly and touchingly is of greater incentive to art than is the best equipped drama, even under the direction of an Irving or a Tree with the splendor of "The Merchant of Venice" or "The Darling of the Gods."

Macbeth as a play is "the picture of a soul innately good. The situation and atmosphere is compared to the situation in a desolate place where all is mystery." The strength and limits of Macbeth's imagination as given by Warde caused every one to be at first fascinated, then we felt suspense and unrest as the grim horror and awe of the terrible scenes were portrayed. Warde surely enters into his work body and soul, and as he was moved in former days by the magnitude of Shakespeare's wonderful portrayal so were we moved Tuesday evening by his powerful rendering of the characters and especially that of Macbeth himself, which he has played throughout the world, winning for himself a name and place among the celebrities of the stage.

Mr. Warde will appear on the coast next season in a like capacity and no doubt a Eugene audience will have an opportunity to hear him in other plays.

This was the last attraction of the Citizens' Entertainment Course.
