Lessons of the Election

One is learning new things in politics every day. Here in Oregon the Oregonian is claiming the state by "from 3000 to 12,000" with the exception of governor and possibly of congressman in the first district. There is a vast difference between this result and the apparent Republican majority of 40,000, as shown by the registration lists. There are some lessons of the result that are worthy of consideration.

In the first place, it is apparent that, as many observers have already concluded, that the large Republican majority of late years has been due mainly to the non-voting of Democrats because of disaffection and discouragement. When a popular leader like Governor Chamberlain heads the ticket the party voters turn out and a good showing is made for the entire list of candidates.

Again, the result shows that the day of straight party voting is a thing of the past and that intelligent men purpose in the future to cast their ballots for men and measures that best represent their ideals of good citizenship. This tendency is apparent in every precinct, and we predict that it will gather force with each succeeding election until the old lines of political division, largely imaginative, will be practically wiped out.

Here in Lane county the campaign was clean and good-natured, and the result will be cheerfully accepted by the voters, who, now that the ballots are counted, are prepared to settle down to the ordinary business of life, with the renewed energy that even a brief relaxation from routine duties and toil, is conducive of. The candidates of a party yesterday are to become the public servants of all the people, irrespective of party, a few days hence, and they will find their worth as officials measured and rewarded in the future, not by their servility to a party organization, but rather by the faithfulness with which they serve the public and redeem their pledges to the people.

An anarchist bomb rends the attendant of a ana horses on the carriage of the king and queen of Spain. A bull literally tore a horse to pieces right under the railing of the box occupied by their royalties. The anarchist threw the bomb in the hope of bettering man's conditions— took chances of his life; Spain's royalty and nobility put the lives of men and helpless horses in jeopardy for show, for so-called pleasure. The anarchist believes that violence will advance the cause of liberty, and his mistake is due to ignorance and environment more than anything else. Education for the masses will bring about emancipation from tyranny in the due course of time.

The eight leaders of the labor riot at the Mexican border town of Cananea had the courage of their convictions. Lined up to be shot to death by files of men with rifles, just as the order to fire was given they cried: "To hell with the government away with Mexico." That last cry is but expressive of the demand of man the world over for more liberty—the fullest measure of liberty. The world moves.

Don't say you knew it would happen. Nobody on earth could have guessed some of the results.

Pull together for progress. That's a fusion platform we may all stand on.

Fifty of our best good crops. And means prosperity in Oregon.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

Hoping for the best isn't sufficient to avert the worst.

A man's work is known by the hit he makes.

There's not so much disgrace as discomfort in poverty.

There are people who acquire great skill in picking a quarrel and dodging the consequences.

Seeking for a reward is a thankless task.

Dignity must be used every day to make the user comfortable.

Selfishness is a world old quality that every one professes to be ashamed of and that no one is.

You can't fool the devil by telling him you mean to reform after awhile.

Lots of girls act as if they don't care if they never marry.

Undue pride is an uncomfortable thing for the rest of the family to live with.

Equal to Man.

"A woman cannot throw a stone."
 "No."
 "Nor a brick."
 "That's right."
 "But there is one thing she can throw."
 "What's that?"
 "A fit."

They Get Our Coin.

We claim to be enlightened,
 In wisdom to have scored
 And to have superstition
 Pushed nearly off the board,
 To every fraud and folly
 Be very much alive,
 But still, if you will notice,
 The fortune tellers thrive.

We loudly talk of science,
 Of law instead of chance,
 And scoff at all false prophets
 Who tell things in advance;
 We laugh at their pretenses
 And beg to doubt their skill,
 But fortune tellers flourish,
 And some one pays the bill.

We tell our wives and others
 That only women buy
 Their future for a quarter
 From men who scan the sky.
 And then we meet a fairy
 Of true prophetic skill,
 Who says we're great and noble,
 And we produce a bill.

We laugh at superstition,
 But often when perplexed
 We go and ask the madam
 If she can put us next.
 We know that it is folly
 To gamble on her trance,
 But still with all our knowledge
 We bite and take a chance.

Came Natural.

"What's the matter with the baby?"
 "Crying because it was born in March."
 "What's that got to do with it?"
 "You have heard of babies mad as a March hare?"

Remarkable.

"She is quite gifted."
 "In what way?"
 "She can hand out a superior line of advice on any subject under the sun at a moment's notice."

Popular Literary Stunt.

"He claims he is making his living writing."
 "Writing home for money."

Neglecting Their Duty.

"Here is where the train ran off the track."
 "Are there no police in this town?"

Take Notice.

The sound of spring is in the air,
 The west wind sighs and passes,
 "If you'd be young and gay and fair,
 Eat sulphur and molasses."

Couldn't Stand For It.

"Does she use her auto much?"
 "Yes, considerably—that is, she divides time with the repair man."

Always Willing to Oblige.

"Can you lend me an umbrella?"
 "Sure thing. Come round the first sunny day."

Honest About It.

"Trying to catch fish?"
 "Not at all. Just trying to use up my bait."

Too Well Acquainted.

"You never eat canned goods?"
 "No. I work in a canning factory."
