

IMPROVEMENTS FOR THE STATE UNIVERSITY

New Library Building and New Girls' Dormitory to Be Erected

The Appropriation Bill Acted Upon by the People at the Recent Election Gives University More Funds

Within a few months the University of Oregon will have a fine library building, as well as additional books, apparatus and equipment. The general appropriation bill of the last legislature, which was held up by the referendum and approved by the people, contains an appropriation of $55,200 for the university. Of this amount $32,500 is appropriated for additional maintenance, including much-needed repairs to the building, improvement of the grounds, the installation of a water plant, purchase of additional scientific apparatus, equipment and books.

The sum of $25,000 is appropriated for the construction and furnishing of a building for library and classroom purposes, and the remaining $5000 is to be used for the construction of a dormitory for women.

For the past two years the university has managed to exist on its regular appropriation of $47,500 per year, although the teaching force has been somewhat reduced and many other inconveniences have been put up with. During the present college year the enrollment of students has been larger than ever before, and the capacity of the university has been taxed to the utmost.

President P. L. Campbell and the members of the faculty have labored under great difficulties, but the additional funds which have been placed at the disposal of the board of regents will alleviate the situation, and accommodations will be made for a large entering class in September.

The board of regents will meet in Eugene during commencement week, when definite plans will be made for the new buildings and improvements.

CHASE FOR RICHES.

We sail across the ocean,
We chase about the land,
We cross the boundless prairie,
We brave the desert sand,
We dig into the mountains,
We dare the northern cold,
And all to capture dollars—
To get a bunch of gold.

We get up in the morning
And spend the day in toil,
And then we keep on slaving
Beneath the midnight oil,
For in the rush for riches
We never want to quit,
Until we have the treasure
Securely in our mitt.

We seek some savage country
Or fever infested coast,
We walk the dread Death valley,
Where weather comes on toast;
We climb a live volcano
And peer down in the pit,
And if we see a nugget
We dive in after it.

We overlook the sunsets,
We miss the baby's smile,
We miss the April blossoms
And other things worth while,
And then to cap the climax,
To top the tale of woe,
In spite of all our striving
We do not get the dough.

Turkish Postal Department.

There is said to be but one postal official in the entire Turkish empire. We may judge from this that the Turks are not much given to writing love letters on postal cards or the official wouldn't have any time left to sell stamps after reading them.

Probably the person who was looking for the letter that never came after he had searched elsewhere would find it in a pigeonhole under some old rubbish in the desk of the official who had been wondering for six months whether he would send it to its destination or sell it for waste paper.

When a new official is appointed there is great excitement in his department if a letter comes directed to somebody after he has held office for three or four years. After consulting with the chief of police he seeks it in water for three days and then cautiously tears it open. Americans who send out circulars to select lists advertising patent churns would drive him to nervous prostration.

A pound of worry,
A thing or two that frets you,
Some more distraction
With strong nerve action,
And then the doctor gets you.

Poets are artists for art's sake and writers of soap advertisements for their stomach's sake.

The trouble with some children is that they don't have to learn how not to behave.

Any man who is lacking in imagination may readily develop it by going fishing.

A man's conscience is apt to come from its hiding place and begin to get busy at once as soon as the police are on his trail.

When Solomon said "All is vanity" he had not seen the man who had just been called down by the boss for flirting with the typewriter.

A tin horn sport usually has his horn battered into a can as soon as the boys get on to him.

A man who is looking for trouble is generally careful to look where he knows he won't find it.

Some day, perhaps, automobiles will be so well trained that they will run to the repair shop of their own accord when the owner turns them loose.

HORSE HURDLES BABY'S GOCART

Runaway Leaps Clear Over Carriage,
Leaving Infant in It Unharmful.

The hair raising escape of the infant daughter of Miss Barnett, a contractor, from death under the hoofs of a runaway horse was a thrilling episode at Atlantic City the other day. The animal, seemingly about to trample the child, leaped completely over the go-cart, leaving the baby unharmful.

The horse had taken fright at an automobile. It dashed through a throng of onlookers crowded with wagons. Mrs. Barnett, who is a young woman, did not see the horse until it was almost LEAPED COMPLETELY OVER THE GOCART, upon her. Unable to draw her baby carriage away, she fell, fainting, to the sidewalk.

Jacob Kumpf, a butcher, leaped in front of the horse and attempted to swerve it to one side, and, while the effort cost him serious injuries, as he was knocked down, it undoubtedly caused the horse to take the leap over the carriage, in which the little girl, unmindful of the danger, was crouching and clapping her hands at the excitement.

NAILED SLAVE BOY TO FLOOR

Pennsylvania Farmer Held on Charges of Fiendish Cruelty to Boy
He Adopted.

James Kelly, a farmer on the Frankford (Pa.) estate of John M. Mack, the multimillionaire contractor and politician, is in Moyamensing prison, in Philadelphia, held in default of bail to answer charges of fiendish cruelty to John Carroll, aged nine years, whom he adopted last February from St. Vincent's orphanage.

Before Magistrate O'Donnell the lad testified that when he had attempted to run away to escape repeated horse-whippings Kelly had driven nails through his heels into the floor.

Young Carroll told a neighbor, Frank Dandabauer, and the latter notified the police. The lad confided to Lieutenant Kenny that his life at the farmhouse had been one of actual slavery.

When Kelly and his wife learned that warrants had been issued for their arrest they packed a few of their belongings into a bundle and took a car for Philadelphia. Joseph Mack, son of John M. Mack, heard of the charges and followed in an automobile.

The chase ended at Holmesburg, a suburb, where Mack caught up with the car, called a policeman and caused the arrest of the fleeing couple.

Fish His Peas.

Dr. R. Pastourath of Jerusalem, firm in the belief that fish can be tamed while in a state of liberty, recently put his belief to the test in Lake Lugana. For several days running he entered the water morning and evening and sat down near the shore with his head above the surface, waiting his hands upon his knees and holding in each of them a large piece of bread. This he did for an hour at a time, taking care to move as little as possible. At last some of the younger fish ventured to nibble the bread, growing daily more confident, and eventually the older fish followed their example. Before the experiment came to an end the doctor could have freely and even handle his strange pets without frightening them away.

Two Wives Sue Dwarf.

The homeliest kind of a dwarf was arraigned in the Essex Market court in New York city the other day charged with bigamy. The man, who is about three feet two inches, gave the name of Charles Levy, age thirty, living at 261 Rockaway avenue, Brooklyn. He is also known as Rudolph Jerusalemsky and Cohn. Lizzie Jerusalemsky No. 1 wants him punished for abandonment. Yetty Cohn of Hoboken said she was married to him in June, 1905. Magistrate Baker held the man in $2,000 bail.

Three Dozen Eggs His Last Meal.

Charles McNulty, a well to do stockman, living near McHenry, Ky., died as a result of eating three dozen hard boiled eggs. McNulty was very fond of eggs and wagers he could eat three dozen at one sitting. The eggs were boiled, and he readily devoured them. Then he ate a two pound can of tomatoes and a half pound of crackers and retired. Three hours later he was seized with cramps and died in four hours. He leaves a widow and two children.

Compensation.

It makes her mad to have men stare
As she goes by; but, spite of that,
It rather pleases her to know
They find her well worth looking at.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

Sometimes a cut and dried programme makes a juicy morsel for the opposition.

If you want to get a reputation as a truthful person tell each man you meet that he is working too hard.

The reason why some men go to the dogs is because the dogs are defenseless.

Diamonds are going up, also the chin of the young lady who is wearing hers for the first time.

Strange to say, when a business woman falls in love she never stops to ask if the man can cook and sew on buttons.

It really does one good to hear two women handing a confirmed gossip some absent treatment after she has gone.

Human intelligence is what a man thinks he has until he wakes up after having spent a pleasant half hour with a confidence man.

An expert is a man who charges twice as much for doing a thing wrong as a dub would have charged for doing it right.

Love isn't so blind but what it can see all the defects in the other fellow who is hanging around the girl.

A man with a shiny pate can win the women all right so long as he is not baldheaded in the pocketbook.

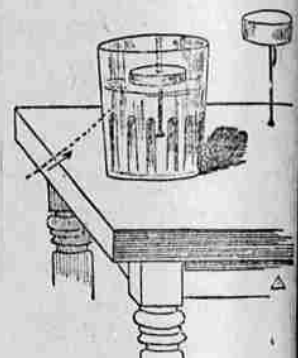

Often, too, wearing is unbelieveing. This is the case too frequently when a man goes to look at the gold mine he has purchased.

THE PHANTOM PIN.

A Toy That Teaches a Lesson in Light Reflection.

It is possible at times to get more than mere amusement out of toys. There are some toys that will instruct as well as amuse, and, while the phantom pin may not be in the strict sense of the word a toy, it will amuse and instruct you at the same time, for it will serve the purpose of giving you a little lesson in the properties of the reflection of light. This is the way the phantom pin is managed:

Take a cork and cut it into the form of a disk of about the thickness of an inch. In its center stick the point of a pin. This done, take a glass about three-quarters full of water and place the cork upon the surface of the liquid with the pin below.

Now if you will look at the cork from above you will not see the pin, but if you will alter your position and diminish the angle of the vision by placing the eye on a parallel with the table on which the glass rests you will perceive a pin above the cork.

WIT SHARPENERS.

A Game in Which the Players Think Quickly.

A delightful home game for children is as follows:
"I see something in this room that begins with R," says the one to be right of mamma.

Now, this person may have ring, top or rocker in his mind. Immediately the guessing will begin, "Rug," "rock," "rocker," and so on. The one guessing correctly will have his turn. If he selects a compound word, as watch-chain, he would give the initial letter of each word, "I see something in this room that begins with w-c."

When tired of this they can change it somewhat by saying:
"Now, I wish a house," "I want a carpet," says "It." The one at his left instantly takes it up, using the last letter of carpet as his initial.

He will perhaps say, "And I will wish a table," while the next will be the last, "e," of table as the beginning letter of his furnishing, "caneel."

If one cannot think of anything before "It" counts ten he must go on or pay a forfeit.

When tired of the house the winner will furnish entertainment of the sort. "I see rain," cries one. "So," says the next. "Thrash," "hill," "rice" and "evergreen" will follow in quick succession.

This game is capable of an almost limitless number of variations. The children can plant trees or a vegetable garden. They can have the sugar, elm, mulberry, yew. They may place in the ground potato, onion, egg plant and tomato, or they may place in flowers in the same manner.

Looked Promising.

"I understand Jones is pretty sick."

"Yes, the doctor has prescribed the best cure for him."

"What is the matter with him?"

"I don't know."

"I wish you would find out. I would like to have that disease myself."
