Logs and Lumber Demand

These clippings from the Tacoma West Coast Lumberman tells the story of the present great demand for lumber:

"Some two or three years ago a logger came to Tacoma with a raft of logs for sale. He did not find a very active demand, so concluded he would try the effects of a good dinner on a mill man. The mill man took the dinner but not the logs. A few days ago a logger came to Tacoma; the mill man invited him up, gave him an elegant dinner, but did not succeed in getting any logs."

"The man with logs to sell either in the Columbia, Gray's Harbor or Puget Sound is not liable to be snubbed these days. For logs in Gray's Harbor have reached $9.50. In Puget Sound logs are scarce and in the Columbia are about holding their own in supply."

"The Eastern & Western Lumber Company, of Portland, confesses that the lumber business is good, but insists that the loggers are getting the best of it. There is a heavy demand for logs along the river, as the Portland and Astoria mills are running night and day."

Western Oregon Leads

Lane is the second county in the state in point of population, barring Multnomah, which is simply the city of Portland. Marion county polled 6893 votes and Lane 6001, the vote being unusually light in this county, having fallen far below the registration. The Oregonian, figuring on the basis of election returns, reaches the conclusion that Western Oregon is growing more rapidly than the country east of the mountains. This is but natural, since the Willamette valley leads in natural resources and is blessed with the finest climate in the world.

Eastern Oregon people, however, have done wonders in the way of the development of the resources of the section, and many have grown rich and prosperous in localities that to the resident of this valley appear a bit of a desert. The trouble with the Willamette valley in the past seems to have been that living has been too easy and a lack of energy has been developed. Now, however, there seems to be dawning a new era, and with the prospective building of electric lines throughout the valley a wonderful growth of population and business may be confidently looked forward to in the next five years.

Morris Goldblatt, who managed to get a good deal of credit while doing business in Eugene, is a humorist in a way. He asserts that the typhoid fever epidemic caused his failure. As his stock is estimated at but $7,000, and that likely considerable above true valuation, while his liabilities, which do not shrink, are given at $12,400, it will be seen that something else than typhoid fever caused Mr. Goldblatt to fail. Of course his creditors have no doubt as to how his failure came about.

The free alcohol bill is of interest to automobile owners, one gallon of wood alcohol that it is claimed can be made and sold for ten cents being equal to two gallons of gasoline for power purposes. This may not be as important in that respect as it seems, however, as it is said the man who buys an automobile first figures on the cost of gasoline, but after he has run it while he forgets the cost of gasoline in trying to figure out the other expenses.

Week after week the words "not available" appear in the bank clearing list where San Francisco was generally represented by the sum of $10,000, 000 and upwards. The dispersion of this enormous volume of business is one of the wonders of the unfortunate calamity. A great mart for home and foreign products disappeared, only temporarily, let us hope.

The great bands of horses running wild on Eastern Oregon ranges were pretty well cleaned out several years ago when they were taken to Lincoln abbatoir, down on the Columbia below Portland, killed and worked up into several commercial products. They were bought up on the range then for about $1.50 a head.

Several thousand tons of rails are arriving at Salem for the Willamette valley electric road. Eugene might be in it too by simply granting a very reasonable franchise.

They are still voting for Governor Chamberlain over in Eastern Oregon.

The seats in the Bryn's band wagon are filling fast.

Clean Up Eleventh Street

It has been suggested that residents of the city, especially along Eleventh street, cut the grass on their lawns and along the street, in preparation for commencement week. There will be many visitors here and the main traveled street to the university ought to present as attractive an appearance as possible.

Pleasant Hill Items

Pleasant Hill, June 21.—Haying has begun.
Crops are looking well, better than the average.

Rev. Horn will continue as pastor of the Christian church here the coming year.

At the school meeting yesterday the following officers were elected: Hill district—Director, Wm. Lattin; clerk, Stutzer. Edendale district—Director, Fred Cook; clerk, P. N. Laird. The proposition to re-locate and build a new schoolhouse in the Edendale district was lost by a large majority, the old house being considered good enough for the district.

Mrs. Bradford, merchant, is now running an up-to-date delivery wagon.

C. L. Williams' log drive is opposite this place, just above Jasper.

Everett Baxter, who suffered concussion of the brain from being thrown from a wagon two weeks ago, is thought to be improving.

The remains of John Mulkey, oldest son of President Mulkey, of the Ashland State Normal School, were interred in the cemetery here last Saturday in the presence of a large number of friends and relatives who had gathered to meet the funeral cortege as it arrived from the south.

Professor H. C. Baughman and family are spending a few days with relatives before moving to their new home in Eugene.

Rev. and Mrs. I. N. Mulkey camp in Polk county to attend the funeral of their grandson and are visiting relatives and old time friends for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. John Renwick are up from Eugene.

P. N. Shelley is quite ill, having had a light stroke of paralysis a few days since.

Mrs. M. Parker and daughters returned to Eugene Sunday.

REGULAR.

Mound Items

Mound, June 20.—The hay is very heavy here this summer on account of the recent rains.

School closed at Mound last Friday. There was a small dance given M. D. Johnson that night. A very enjoyable evening was spent.

Chair Hinkson had the bad luck to get his leg cut on a scythe while coming from Eugene last week.

Leslie Crenshaw was seen going down the road leading a horse. Give an explanation, Les.

Chas. Layne has been working on the new telephone line from Crow to Eugene.

M. D. and R. R. Johnson have finished their logging at Leaburg and will be home in a few days.

Death From Lockjaw

never follows an injury dressed with Bucklen's Arnica Salve. Its antiseptic and healing properties prevent blood poisoning. Chas. Crowl, merchant, of Rensselaerville, N. Y., writes: "I cured Seth Burch, of this place, of the biggest sore on his neck I ever saw." Cures cuts, wounds, burns and sores. See at W. L. DeLano's drug store.

Enameloid is an enamel paint for inside use; see color card at Chambers' Hardware.

A Poem for Today

LOVE

By Jean Ingelow

JEAN INGELOW, poet and novelist, was born at Boston, Lincolnshire, England, in 1820 and died in London in 1907. Her quiet, uneventful life was passed among peaceful surroundings and was devoted to literature, her father's wealth lifting Miss Ingelow above care. Among the best known and loved of her poems are the "Songs of Seven," which portray a woman's life from seven to seventy-seven. Besides her poems Miss Ingelow wrote novels and children's books.

I LEANED out of my window, I smelt the white clover,
Dark, dark was the garden, I saw not the gate;
"Now, if there be footsteps, he comes, my one lover—
Hush, nightingale, hush! Oh, sweet nightingale, wait
Till I listen and hear
If a step draweth near,
For my love he is late.

"The skies in the darkness stoop nearer and nearer,
A cluster of stars hangs like fruit in the tree,
The fall of the water comes sweeter, comes clearer:
To what art thou listening, and what dost thou see?
Let the stars cluster and grow,
Let the sweet waters flow,
And cross quickly to me.

"You night moths that hover where honey brims over
From sycamore blossoms, or settle or sleep;
You glowworms shine out and the pathway discover
To him that comes darkling along the rough steep.
Ah, my sailor, make haste,
For the time runs to waste,
And my love lieth deep—

"Too deep for swift telling; and yet my one lover,
I've come thee an answer; it waits through the night."
By the sycamore passed he, and through the white clover,
Then all the sweet speech I had fashioned took flight:
But I'll love him more, more
Than e'er wife loved before,
Be the days dark or bright.

A Man Who Didn't Know How to Spell His Own Name

(Original.)

My grandfather was a private in the Mexican war, and I got this story from him direct:

I was with that army which, under Scott, landed at Vera Cruz and marched to the City of Mexico, fighting one battle after another by the way. In the 4th artillery was a sergeant named Kelly, who was one of the best disciplinarians among noncommissioned officers I ever knew. Any man under his command must "toe the mark" or take the consequences. Kelly was an Irishman and had served in the British army. He was a natural soldier and, like most such, was not fitted for anything else.

At Vera Cruz a man who said that his parents were or had been Americans, though he had been born and had always lived in Mexico, wanted to enlist in the United States army. He spoke English with a broken Spanish accent, but any one under the circumstances would have done that. He was accepted, put in the battery with Kelly and fell under the sergeant's orders. The recruit gave his name as Gallagher, which denoted Irish extraction, and Kelly looked for him to have at least heard something about the Emerald Isle, but he was woefully ignorant of it. For this reason, possibly, the sergeant was not possessed in his favor and put on the screws of discipline in his case to the fullest extent. Gallagher bore the sergeant's severe rebukes at his errors at first with patience, but he looked as much like a Spaniard as an Irishman, and he could not miss pugnacious blood in either race. At any rate the sergeant worried him into a state of frenzy. We enlisted men thought we saw dislike for the recruit in Kelly and condemned him for taking advantage of his position to gratify his spite. There was one act that came under my observation which was unfair. He had noticed that Gallagher was especially indisposed to do "police duty"—that is, be wined at going about picking up old papers, cigar stumps and such like, and the sergeant detailed him for this duty oftener than he should have done.

Once when Gallagher had been detailed for the same ignoble work three days in succession he refused to serve. Hot words between him and Kelly resulted, and the affair ended by the recruit knocking the sergeant down. I saw this quarrel, and I made up my mind that Gallagher had drawn Irish fight with his mother's milk and Spanish fight with the atmosphere he had breathed from the day he was born. Brought as he was by the sun of tropics, he looked under the spirit of rebellion more like a descendant of the Aztecs than the Irish and more like a Spaniard than either.

Instead of giving vent to rage, as he was bound to do by the traditions of his race, Kelly picked himself up and quietly called for a corporal of the guard to take the mutinous recruit to the guardhouse. It occurred to me that he had been trying to prod the man into mutiny in order to have the pleasure of penning him up. As Gallagher was marched away I noticed a peculiar expression on his face, an expression that denoted self condemnation. He was evidently much dissatisfied with himself for letting the sergeant get the better of him.

We marched next day, and Gallagher walked, with other prisoners, under guard. We soon came upon the Mexicans, and our little army deployed for a fight. The ordinary routine of army life vanishes with the sound of firing, and Gallagher was in it with the rest of us. I remember seeing one of the junior lieutenants telling him to "go in" and he would help him by testifying to the fact on his trial for mutiny. But that was the last I saw of the mutineer during the fight, and after it was over no one saw him. He was among the missing. When I suggested that he had died the death of a soldier, Kelly's wrath exploded.

"Killed, the spalpeen! D'ye be thinking there was a bullet fired by the Mexicans that would 'a' touched the dirty spy?"
"What do you mean, sergeant?"
"Oh, go 'long wid' yer. D'ye think I wouldn't know any of the Gallagher's? The miserable Spaniard didn't even know how to spell his own Irish name."
We laughed at the sergeant's prejudice against the poor fellow, who must have been killed by those of another corps who didn't know him, and thought no more about the matter.

Our work had now commenced in earnest, and we had no time for anything but fighting till we had captured the City of Mexico. Our battery was a good deal cut up by the concentrated fire of several Mexican batteries on the heights of Chapultepec. Kelly vowed that the Aztec, as he had called Gallagher, had come back from purgatory and entered the body of the officer commanding the battery that had done us the most damage. When the fight was over Kelly went up the heights, and later we saw him coming back with a body slung over his shoulder. When he reached the battery he threw a dead Mexican officer on the ground and exclaimed:

"O' know O'p'd git 'im some time. It's the spalpeen that was spyin' on us under pretense o' bein' a Gallagher. O' knew he was a spy, but O' couldn't prove it."
There, true enough, was the body of the man who had called himself Gallagher in the uniform of a major of artillery in the Mexican army.

Slightly Building Locations

If you want a home building place where you have plenty of room—are not crowded by neighbors yet within ten minutes walk of the business part of town, see J. R. Campbell about those two slightly lots where you first will strike the raise of College hill, turning west by Chapman's plowing mill then south to get there. Good sidewalk to property and streets on both sides of lots graded and gravelled. The grading on both sides leaves the lots one to two feet above the grade with a gentle slope on both streets. Splendid view of the valley, mountains and town from the location.

An ordinary gait in walking will take you there from the business part of town in ten minutes. At end of lengthwise board walk on left.
