CURIOSITY IN SHAPE OF POTATO VINE

P. L. Harsh, who owns a small place on the Day island, northeast of the city, brought to the Guard office today a curiosity in the shape of a potato vine. On the vine and above the ground were growing a dozen or more potatoes ranging from the size of a peanut to nearly that of a hen's egg. Potatoes were also growing on the vine beneath the ground.

The Glass Blowers

Lorow's Glass Blowers arrived in the city this morning. They will open a week's engagement tonight. This company of artists comes well recommended and guarantee a high class exhibition, consisting of glass blowing, glass spinning and weaving. A glass steam engine which is constantly in motion, with instructive lectures on natural philosophy, including the water hammer, the balloon jar or artesian diver, steam and its application to steam engines will be interesting features. The admission will be 10 cents. Everything made by the six artists will be given away to the visitors free as souvenirs. They will at exhibit 531 Willamette street. Open at 7 each evening and 2 to 5 in the afternoon.

Twenty Year Battle

"I was a loser in a twenty year battle with chronic piles and malignant sores, until I tried Bucklin's Arnica Salve; which turned the tide, by curing both, till not a trace remains," writes A. M. Bruce, of Farmville, Va. Best for old ulcers, cuts, burns and wounds. 25c at W. L. DeLano, druggist.

Eastern Excursion Rates

Call at the local ticket office for particulars. L. G. ADAIR, Agent.

Only 82 Years Old

"I am only 82 years old and don't expect even when I get to be real old to feel that way as long as I can get Electric Bitters," says Mrs. E. H. Branson, of Dublin, Ga. Surely there's nothing else keeps the old as young and makes the weak as strong as this grand tonic medicine. Dyspepsia, torpid liver, inflamed kidneys or chronic constipation are unknown after taking Electric Bitters a reasonable time. Guaranteed by W. L. DeLano druggist. Price 50c.

The Coliseum.

The Coliseum of Rome was built to accommodate 100,000 spectators. It was 120 feet high and covered one and a half acres of land.

England's Rose.

The rose, the national flower of England, is symbolic of superior merit. It is said that this symbolism was popularly used as early as the war of York and Lancaster, generally known as the "war of the roses."

A Moorish Curiosity.

Horush of Algiers was famous among his subjects as the Red Beard. A Moor with red hair and beard was a great curiosity.

Phthisis.

Needle makers are more subject to phthisis than men of any other occupation. Next come flintmakers, lithographers, grinders, tobaccoists, watchmakers, stonecutters, glass workers, hairdressers, weavers, painters, printers, shoemakers, glaziers, hatters, carpenter, masons, millers, brewers, tanners, bakers, butchers, charcoal burners and last of all miners.

A Test of Symmetry.

A good test of a man's symmetry may be made if he stands with his face to the wall. The chest of a perfectly formed man will touch the wall, his nose will be four inches away, his thighs five and the tips of his toes three.

The Kicking Cow

(Copyright, 1906, by Thomas Sprague.)

"See here, parson," said Aunt Hetty Strong to her pastor, "I've come to prefer charges against Samuel Johnson. He's a class leader in our church, and yet he swears like a pirate."

"I am sorry to hear that. When did you hear him swear and what about?"

"He's been cursing night and morning for the last week, and it has always been when he was milking. He has pummed one of his cows in a dreadful manner three or four times."

"I am going to Smithville today," replied the pastor, "and I'll stop and see Brother Johnson."

That afternoon the pastor drove out and stopped at the farmer's. After some little conversation on other topics he introduced the matter of swearing.

"I'm not going to deny it," replied the farmer as he gritted his teeth. "Yes; I have been swearing. I know it's wicked and that charges would be against me, but I just couldn't help it. I expect to swear again this evening at milking time."

"Is a cow mixed up with it?" asked the pastor.

"Very much so. Two weeks ago I traded some hogs with a man over in Delhi for a cow. She's the worst kicker on the face of this earth. She has kicked me off the milk stool from one to three times every time I have tried to milk her."

"And you have sworn?"

"I couldn't help it."

"And you have pummed her?"

"I have tried to break her back."

"I am sorry, brother Johnson—very sorry. You must expect to be tried in this world, and you must expect to rise superior. Swearing and cruelty to animals is altogether un-Christianlike. I presume you have heartily repented?"

"I won't admit that I have," answered the farmer in stubborn tones.

The pastor shook his head and clasped his hands and looked up at the ceiling. By and by he said:

"I think you need an object lesson in patience and kindness. Brother Johnson, and I guess I will stay to supper and milk that cow myself."

"By John, but I'll put a bag of potatoes into your buggy if you will! Yes, and if you want to criticize me after the milking I won't say a word beyond begging your pardon."

Three hours later the farmer and the pastor approached the barnyard to do the milking. The kicking cow was the most humble and demure of the three cows in the yard. There was self-abnegation in her pose and timidity in her eye. The pastor studied her for a couple of minutes and then wondered if Brother Johnson hadn't been tapping a barrel of old cider.

"That's the critter," said the farmer as he pointed her out.

The pastor approached and stroked her and had a few kind words to say. His look grew complacent as he patted her. He was almost benumbed as he patted his stool and sat down and began work. The cow stood like a statue. There were flies trying to get in their work on her hind legs, but she never even switched her tail.

"Brother Johnson," was remarked after about five minutes, "don't you think you have been mistaken in this cow?"

"Hardly ever, pastor."

"Then I can't quite make it out. A more kind and gentle animal I never—"

"The cow swung with her right leg, and the hoof and all the weight behind it caught the good man full in the stomach and sent him rolling over and over. He lay gasping for breath for a moment, and when he looked to his feet he leaned against a shed and said:

"Brother Johnson, I seem to have been kicked by your cow."

"Right you are, parson. Are you thinking of any swear words?"

The parson smiled faintly.

"Don't you want a fence rail to pound her with?"

The parson smiled faintly some more and then said:

"You might go across the road and ask Aunt Hetty to step over here for a moment. Tell her I wish to speak to her."

Ten minutes later Aunt Hetty arrived. She expected the pastor was going to confront her with Farmer Johnson as to the swearing and pounding, and she turned pale and grew nervous over it, but he softly and kindly said:

"Sister Strong, would you kindly sit down and milk this cow?"

"Why, certainly," she replied. "This is the new cow Brother Johnson's been getting, and it's a shame the way he has sworn at her and pummed her around. As I was saying to my husband this morning, she's as quiet as an old sheep."

The pastor and the farmer stood aside, and Aunt Hetty sat down with stool and pail. For three or four minutes the cow closed her eyes and seemed to dream of babbling brooks and grassy dells. Then she opened them and went to business with that right leg. A little extra steam was put on for the occasion, and Aunt Hetty went five feet beyond the pastor's record and was a full minute longer than he in recovering her senses. Her first exclamation was, "Darn that cow!"

Her first move was to grab up a club.

"Sister Strong, do you blame Brother Johnson for swearing at and pounding this cow?" asked the pastor.

"Not by a dum sight!" she heartily replied.

"And you—you don't want him churched?"

"Not unless he refuses to knock her horns off and break her back!"

"Well, I feel somewhat that way myself, and if you are willing we will drop the matter of this morning and say no more about it. Thanks for your kindness in coming over and demonstrating, Sister Strong." M. QUAD.
