FUNERAL OF DR. CONDON AT THE UNIVERSITY

Attended by the Largest Audience Ever Seen at Such a Service in Eugene - Remains Interred Beside Those of Mrs. Condon in the Masonic Cemetery

The funeral of Professor Thomas Condon was held in Villard hall at the university this afternoon and was attended by the largest audience ever seen at a similar service in Eugene. The business houses of the city closed their doors for the occasion and a large majority of the merchants and shop keepers attended the funeral to show their respect and reverence for the deceased.

The funeral cortege left the Condon home at the corner of Eleventh and High streets at 2 o'clock. The members of the faculty and alumni of the university acted as an escort of honor and the remains were accompanied by the following pall bearers: Professor F. S. Dunn, Professor E. H. McAllister, Professor John Straub, E. O. Potter, L. E. Bean, C. S. Williams; honorary, T. G. Hendricks, B. F. Dorris, J. J. Walton, B. J. Hawthorne, Professor F. G. Young, Mayor F. M. Wilkins.

After the arrival of the remains at Villard hall the services began, the funeral sermon being preached by Rev. P. S. Knight, of Salem. Rev. R. C. Brooks, of Oakland, read the scripture and offered prayer. The music was furnished by a quartet under the direction of Professor I. M. Glen and consisting, besides himself, of Professor F. S. Dunn, Miss Eve Stinson and Mrs. G. D. Linn. After the services the casket was opened and the audience viewed the remains. They were then conveyed to the Masonic cemetery and laid to rest by the side of those of Mrs. Condon. The floral tributes were many and handsome, and the services throughout were deeply impressive.

Memorial Service. There will be a service in memory of Professor Condon in the Congregational church Thursday evening, February 14th, at 7:30 p. m., the service being conducted by Rev. Mr. Brooks, a former pastor of the church.

A Meteorological Paradox

I once knew a quartet composed of the funniest people you ever saw in your life. They weren't four men or four women nor two men and two women, but three men and a woman. Each of the three men was funnier than the other two, and the woman was funnier than the three men together. You should have seen her. One eye was turned up at an angle of twenty-five degrees, the other down at an angle of thirty. She could look serious and sympathetic out of the one eye and hysterically diabolical out of the other. She had a ravenish croak and a sweet melody in her voice, so that no one could tell whether she meant to be pleasant or disagreeable. Sometimes she would say pleasant things to you looking at you with her sympathetic eye and sometimes say diabolical things looking at you with her sympathetic eye. So nobody ever knew what she was driving at.

The first of the three men was Mr. Bantam, husband of the above described lady. Everybody said the name was very appropriate, for Mr. Bantam's face wore the perpetual grin of a bantam rooster. Next came Mr. Guyer, a theoretical mathematical prodigy. Like Sir Isaac Newton, who made a large and small hole in his door for his big and little cat to come through, Guyer didn't stoop to consider petty contrivances. He once had an alarm clock which failed to wake him up in the morning. Somebody finally called his attention to the fact that it hadn't any bell. The third man was Mr. Merryweather, a "real noble, good man," as one of his women friends expressed it. Indeed, he was so good and noble that he couldn't conceive of any one being wicked. And thereby hangs this tale.

One Sunday morning Merryweather and Guyer went to see Mr. and Mrs. Bantam, who were at church. The two men sat on the veranda waiting till the services should be over and the couple, recharged, like an electric automobile, with goodness, should return. The weather was betwixt and between, and when Merryweather said it was warm Guyer, who was a great disputant, declared it was cold. Presently Mr. and Mrs. Bantam returned, Mrs. Bantam welcoming Guyer with her sympathetic eye and Merryweather with her diabolical eye, then passing into the house. The dispute about the weather was referred to Bantam, who concluded to refer it to the thermometer, which he brought from the house. He showed it to Merryweather, who was surprised to see a record of 90 degrees. He was much pleased to be vindicated, but hadn't expected so triumphant a vindication.

Then Mrs. Bantam came out and, regarding her husband and Guyer with her sympathetic eye and the good Mr. Merryweather with her diabolical eye, made some modest remarks on the weather herself, in which she maintained that it was growing colder. After having established her point, at least with Bantam and Guyer—Mrs. Bantam always established her point; people were afraid that if they disagreed with her she would bring her diabolical eye on them—she went back into the house with the thermometer.

Presently Bantam went inside to get the thermometer again, and when he brought it out it had fallen 20 degrees. Merryweather couldn't understand how so decided a change should have occurred in so short a time without his feeling it. Guyer suggested that there was something the matter with him. Merryweather was frightened. He thought he had better go home.

Mrs. Bantam came out again, bringing the thermometer with her and suggesting that something must be the matter with it. It had gone up again. This reassured Merryweather, who was of too sweet a disposition to speak his thoughts, which were that Mrs. Bantam had probably read the scale first with her lower, then with her upper eye. But as there were 45 degrees between the two eyes this didn't explain the smaller difference. However, he decided to wait awhile before concluding that he had chills and fever. The consequences might have been averted had not Bantam handed round a stimulant. A few minutes after Merryweather had drained his glass Mrs. Bantam came out with the thermometer again standing at 60 degrees. Then Merryweather was sure he had the fever of pneumonia. A sympathetic curve appeared on the left hand corner of Mrs. Bantam's mouth as she remarked that it came on that way.

Merryweather was helped into the house and placed on a lounge. Occasionally he would resume a normal bodily temperature, but whenever he did so one of his three friends would show him a thermometer antipodal to his condition, if the mercury stood low when he was hot he thought he was in fever. If it stood high when he was cool he assumed that he had a chill. In this way his loving friends kept working on his imagination and through his imagination on his body till he got up and went home to die. Once out of the way of the malign influence that had tormented him, he was surprised at a sudden recovery.

Now, the explanation of this meteorological paradox is this: Bantam before bringing the thermometer out on to the veranda to settle the dispute between Merryweather and Guyer had held the bulb in his fist. When he took it inside he gave it to Mrs. Bantam with instructions to put it in the ice chest. And so the thermometer was kept oscillating between heat and cold while Mr. Merryweather was oscillating between cold and heat till he was thrown into a condition of imaginary pneumonia.

BIG MATCH FACTORY AT SPRINGFIELD

Portland Men Incorporate Company to Manufacture Matches on Extensive Scale - New Process Said to Have Been Discovered by Springfield Man

Articles incorporating the Springfield Match Company were filed with the county clerk today. As a result of the organization of the company Oregon will begin a new industry, the manufacture of matches. The plant is to be located at Springfield, this state, where the manufacture of matches will be conducted on an extensive scale. The incorporators are Sol. Hart, L. B. Reader and G. W. Caldwell. It is said that a resident of Springfield has discovered a process for making matches that has been tested and found entirely practical. His process, he claims, produces a much better match at a lower cost than the other kinds now sold. — Tuesday's Portland Journal.
