To protect purchasers in the utmost, Mennen's Powder is now put up in the "box that fits," a box which cannot be refilled with an inferior substitute. Insist on having Mennen's and only Mennen's as the only protection against imitations and substitutes.

COMPANY A'S ANNUAL BANQUET A SUCCESS

Given in the Armory Last Night. Largely Attended and Greatly Enjoyed by Company Members and Guests Present.

Company A's annual banquet in the company room at the armory last night was probably the most successful and enjoyable affair of its kind ever given by a Eugene military organization. Long tables had been arranged for the banquet by Mrs. Osburn, of the Hoffman House, during the day, and when the company members and a few invited guests arrived at the room in the evening they found every good thing to eat imaginable ready for them. After the supper had been completed Toastmaster R. S. Huston called upon the several visitors and a number of the members of the company for speeches and all responded in a happy vein befitting the occasion. Among those who spoke were Major Geo. O. Yoran, Captain C. C. Hammond, Lieutenant Schoemaker, of Company A, Third regiment, of Baker City, Lieutenants Babb and Rennie, S. W. Taylor and Manager Bond, of Company C's basketball team, the team being guests of honor. The entertainment committee consisted of the non-commissioned officers of the company, and the sub-committee on banquet was Sergeants Furnish and Faust and Corporal Harris.

After the banquet a basketball game between two picked teams was played in the pavilion, resulting in a tie.

VERY SMALL DIVIDEND IN PATTY CASE

The creditors of Reuben Patty, bankrupt, met in the office of C. A. Wintermeyer, referee in bankruptcy, this morning. The sale of a certain portion of the stock in the Eugene bakery and the lease on the building to W. H. Dunn for $250 was confirmed. The rest of the property, which was mortgaged to Williams & Shelley for $1000, was ordered turned over to them by the trustee, as it would not bring enough, if sold, to satisfy the mortgage. This leaves about $175 for the payment of expenses and dividends. The dividends, if any at all, will be very small, perhaps no more than one per cent.

ELKS HOLD SPLENDID STAG SOCIAL

Affair Given Last Night by the Eugene Lodge Was Most Enjoyable. Large Number of Visitors and Members Present.

Eugene lodge No. 375, B. P. O. E., gave a stag social and banquet last night at their hall, which for pure enjoyment was never beaten by a similar organization in Eugene. All evening merriment reigned supreme, and those whose good fortune it was to be present will never regret that they attended. Besides a large number of members of the order there were several invited guests who were made to wish that they, too, belonged to this ever popular and prosperous organization. During the evening there was music by the Theatre orchestra, by members of the university mandolin club and by members of the university glee club. During the progress of the splendid banquet toasts were responded to by the following: Exalted Ruler C. S. Williams acting as toastmaster; "Lee M. Travis on 'Elkdom'; Dr. Geo. Wall, 'Dehorning an Elk'; M. Schneider with his original toast; Herbert Leigh on 'Madame Butterfly'; G. W. Griffin, S. H. Friendly, V. J. Copper and Dr. L. L. Whitson.

The menu at the banquet consisted of all the delicacies of the season, some imported from Portland. The banquet was one of the most elaborate ever served by the local Elks.

HITCHCOCK TESTIFIES AGAINST HERMANN

Washington, March 12.--Today Binger Hermann, for the first time in many months, met his former superior, Ethan Allen Hitchcock, who became Hermann's relentless prosecutor. On the witness stand Hitchcock described the manner in which Hermann was forced from the commission of the general land office on January 15, 1903. He also told how Senator Mitchell pleaded for Hermann's retention, and, failing, procured a delay until informed that if his resignation was not immediately forthcoming Hermann would be dismissed. Hitchcock also related how Hermann withheld from him the S. J. Holsinger reports on the Benson Hyde land frauds, in which was given a graphic description of the methods employed by the land looters of Oregon and California. The Holsinger reports showed how dummies had been used in hundreds of instances in procuring school land. Forgery had also been resorted to.

Tomorrow (Thursday) is the date for the annual meeting of the Congregational church. There will be a dinner at 6 o'clock p. m., with a business meeting immediately afterward. All members of the church and all who attend the church services are invited to be present at both these gatherings.

TRAVERS & CO.

(Copyright, 1906, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)
The mercantile house of Travers & Co., New York, had a branch in Paris for twenty years, when Travers himself, after looking over old accounts, noticed something wrong.

The next steamer sailing for Havre carried with her Thomas Agnew, the firm's bookkeeper. He was provided with all proper credentials, and his instructions were to give the Paris books a thorough overhauling. He was to interview the head of the French firm first. This he did soon after reaching Paris.

"I hardly expected you, but I am glad that you are here," was his greeting. "It is true that the business has fallen off, and it has been a source of anxiety to me. We seem to be doing as much as ever, but the sales show less and less. I cannot suspect any of the employees. The bookkeeper is the only one who could juggle the figures, and he is probity itself. He has been with us for ten years past and is as steady as a church. I might as well suspect myself."

"Nevertheless, if there is anything wrong it must be in his department," suggested Agnew.

There were two or three interviews, and then it was suggested that Dubois, which was the name of the bookkeeper, be given leave of absence for a couple of weeks. He refused to take it. Then Agnew called for instructions and was told to go ahead. He was taken to the office and introduced and his errand stated. To his agreeable disappointment Dubois gave him a cordial welcome and offered every assistance in his power. He would be only too glad to have his books looked over and verified. His frankness and eagerness were a setback to Agnew, but a day was appointed for the commencement of the work. No man could have set out to render himself more agreeable than the French bookkeeper did. He first invited Agnew to his home to dinner. It was a modest little cottage, plainly furnished and evidently economically managed. There were a wife and two children, and the family appeared to be happy and contented.

Agnew had made up his mind that Dubois was certainly living on his income and was a man of steady habits when his wife happened to mention during the momentary absence of the husband that she would be entirely happy if Claude did not have to remain at the office so late three or four nights in the week. As a matter of fact, the office always closed at 5:30 p. m., and Agnew was made uneasy by the remarks. Dubois made arrangements to show the American certain sights the next evening, and they were together for several hours. At a cafe where they stopped for a last drink Agnew, who had taken very little during the evening and who called for a mild glass on this occasion, suddenly found the room whirling round and round with him and finally pitched forward on the floor and became unconscious. When he came to some time during the next day he was ill and found that he had been robbed and was clothed in the garb of a workman. He was also a prisoner in a cellar so dark that he could not see across it. There were a pitcher of water and a loaf of bread beside him. He drank of the water and slept for hours.

When he awoke again the effects of the drug were gone, and he explored his prison, to discover that it had only one small window, and that looked out on a back yard and was heavily barred. There had been stairs leading up to a door, but they had been removed. No sounds reached him from above, and the noises from the street were muffled.

An hour later a man thrust a ladder down and brought more bread and water. He was armed with a knife and refused to answer any questions. The American coughed, threatened and tried to bribe, but the man was firm. Three times a day for the next ten days he brought bread and water, but never anything else. Then one evening he left the ladder behind him when he ascended, as if by an oversight, and after waiting for an hour Agnew crept up, to find the door open. He had no trouble in leaving the house, which was without tenants and situated in a slum street. The man hadn't a penny in money, and his suit was old and ragged. When he awoke a gardener he was ordered to move on. He moved on and told his story again and again and at length was arrested and locked up. In the morning the police judge was about to commit Agnew as a vagrant when he asked that the head of the firm be sent for. This was done, and of course the prisoner was soon at liberty. He could not guide the police to the street where he had been held prisoner, but a visit to the home of Dubois explained everything. He had abandoned his family eight days previously. In a day or two it was shown that for five years he had maintained three separate establishments, and in two of them he had passed for a single man. Instead of being a man of probity, a brief examination of his books showed that he had stolen $90,000 from the firm in six years. Had an expert been put on his books at any time his frauds would have been discovered in half a day.

It took the police a couple of weeks to secure a clue, but the embroiler was finally followed to South Africa and up the country to the diamond mines. When arrested he was all bravado, but three days later he committed suicide under the officer's nose, and the case against him was closed.
