From here they go direct to Portland to reopen the Marquam-Grand theatre.

S. W. Curtis, the man who during the past two years has made extensive fillings on the waters of the McKenzie, Santiam and other rivers of Western Oregon, with the idea of some time utilizing the power for electrical purposes, today filed with the county clerk notice of appropriation of 16,000 miners' inches of the waters of Salt Creek, and an equal amount from those of Diamond creek, tributaries of the upper Willamette. The proposed canal is to be 20 feet wide and 7 feet deep.

T. G. Hendricks and F. M. Wilkins, members of the city park commission, drove out to Hendricks' park today and found that the new well had been completed and a good supply of water found. The well is 125 feet deep and the water is 80 feet deep. It is thought that this well will supply all the water needed at the park for the present, although another one will be sunk during the summer in some other part of the park. This one is on top of the ridge just back of the Hamble residence.

Odd Phases of Jamestown's Fair.

WHEN it was decided to hold an exposition to commemorate the tercentennial of Jamestown settlement of Jamestown from April 26 to Dec. 1, this year, the promoters of the enterprise set about the task of making it different from similar projects of the past. They were fortunate in receiving the hearty support of the United States government for their plans and in obtaining from a large number of states appropriations for buildings and exhibits. The South American states responded in most instances to the advances made by representatives of the exposition, so that almost all will have some kind of participation in the tercentennial.

The United States government, instead of making a large appropriation in aid of the fair itself, set apart about $1,500,000 to be used in the construction of its own buildings at the exposition and in the erection of two extensive piers in front of the fair grounds. It has put forth efforts in furtherance of the great international naval display, which is to be held under its auspices beginning May 13 and ending Nov. 20. President Roosevelt on the authorization of congress invited all the nations of the earth to send their ships of war to participate in this display, and it has been estimated that the value of the battleships, cruisers, torpedo boats and other naval craft taking part will not fall short of $250,000,000. Besides this there will be a great assemblage of maritime and pleasure craft and ships representing the progress made in maritime industries in the past 300 years. There will be twenty yacht races on the waters of Hampton Roads, and one of the spectacles which will attract the widest interest will be the reproduction of the famous contest between the Merrimae and Monitor. The federal government has set aside a large portion of its appropriation for this spectacle, which will be repeated at stated times during the exposition season, and the fight will occur on the exact spot where the original engagement took place during the civil war. As it happens, this was precisely in front of the exposition grounds.

The advantage the exposition possesses by reason of its location on the shores of Hampton Roads has been seized and well utilized in the planning of the grounds and the aquatic features of the show. The entrance to the exposition from the direction of the ocean is under a magnificent arch, illuminated at night with thousands of electric lights. Passing under this arch, the boats enter Smith harbor, named in honor of Captain John Smith, and persons on stepping ashore find themselves in Raleigh square. The basin known as Smith harbor is formed by piers extending out into the waters of Hampton Roads 2,000 feet. They are 200 feet wide, and on the shore line accommodate handsome passenger stations. At the farther ends they are joined by a third pier, arched in the center, to admit of the passage of water craft beneath. These farther ends of the piers contain towers equipped with wireless telegraph apparatus and powerful searchlights. The piers were erected by the government at an expense of $400,000. The basin formed by the piers comprises an area of forty acres and will be used for all sorts of minor aquatic events. The electric illumination of the piers, together with the subaqueous illumination of the basin, will form a most brilliant and novel spectacle.

One of the historical features of the fair is the reproduction of the village of Jamestown as it is supposed to have appeared in the seventeenth century, with stockades, forts and Indian villages. Among the spectacles and entertainments on the War Path, the Jamestown Midway, will be some having historical themes, one of the latter being a drama entitled "Pocahontas," putting on the boards the romance of the Indian princess who saved the life of Captain John Smith.

The Only Drawback.
 Mary—Did she make a good match?
 Ann—Splendid! Lots of money, good social position and all that! In fact, the only drawback is the husband.

All For Nothing.

John Thompson was twenty-one and old for his age. The only thing youthful about him was his love for Anita Merriweather, who was but seventeen and young for that tender age. Anita's parents had reluctantly consented to an engagement, fearing that their daughter might change her mind before reaching a marriageable age or later on find herself tied to a man whom she would not choose at maturity. But Anita regarded herself already as at a marriageable age and saw no possibility of ever changing her mind.

"Johnny," she said one day, "I wish you had more spirit."
 "What do you mean, sweetheart?" asked John, surprised.
 "I think you submit very tamely to all these requirements and conditions laid down for us by papa and mamma."

"I don't know of but one—the waiting till you are nineteen."
 "Isn't that enough? But I suppose it doesn't seem very long to you."
 "I don't permit myself to think of it. I try to keep my mind on my daily work. This will the better enable me to take care of you when I get you."

"What a humdrum sort of fellow you are! I like a man who resents having others stand in the way of his desires, especially in love."
 There was a good deal more of this. Anita, though not much beyond childhood, had a woman's natural aptitude for carrying her point, and she succeeded in doing so with John. That point was to gain his consent to marriage with or without her parents' permission.

"Very well," he said after discovering that a willful woman must have her own way. "What do you propose?"
 "I suppose we'll have to run away."
 "I don't think we'll have to run very fast."

"Indeed we shall. If papa should get wind of our going, he would follow us furiously."

"I doubt it. He has no objection to me. He only wishes us to wait till you are sure of your own mind."

The upshot of it all was that a few days later John stopped at the door of the Merriweathers' with his automobile. Anita got in, and they rolled away. They had taken many an afternoon ride together, and there was neither occasion to ask permission nor to put on any considerable power. Anita's mood, however, was not in keeping with their quiet conditions. She either clutched John's arm as though for protection or drew away from him as though he was dragging her into it. John, when he had got beyond the town limits, put on a fair speed. For the first time since the elopement, if it could be called such, had been mentioned Anita's thoughts appeared to be turned from her own desires to whatever of pain she might be inflicting upon her parents.

"I wonder how mother will take it," she said.
 "Don't know," was John's laconic reply.

"I've always been papa's especial pet. It's hard to do anything to hurt him."

"I suppose he'll have to stand it."
 "You're very unfeeling."
 "Unfeeling, sweetheart! It isn't that. We must face boldly the conditions we take upon ourselves."

There was a pause, after which she began again:
 "Mother's health hasn't been of the best for the past few months. I hope it won't break her down."

John made no comment on this. They were jogging along steadily. She was so absorbed with her thoughts that she paid no attention to the route they were taking.

"I don't know," she went on, "what I'm going to do without papa's kiss every night and morning."
 "I'll give you two," said John, "instead of one."
 "H'm!"

They were approaching a house. John guided the automobile in to the sidewalk and stopped.
 "What's this?" exclaimed the would-be bride in terror.
 "Clergyman."

"That horrid Mr. Parker? I don't want to be married by him. Go on, quick."

John pushed on. Anita leaned back on the leather cushion and as a protection against wind and dust drew a veil over her face. The machine chugged, the sun shone down softly, the birds were singing in the trees beside the road. John heard a sob. Then Anita took out her pocket handkerchief, managed to get it under her veil and covered her eyes with it. If John had been driving a horse instead of an automobile he would have put an arm about her to comfort her, but his machine needed both hands. Anita maintained her position. She kept her handkerchief over her eyes and occasionally gave an audible sob. John maintained silence. Being old for his age, he knew that anything he could say would be of no avail and would increase the trouble. He was a man of deeds rather than words. But he could not help thinking that it was not a cheerful wedding party.

Time and the automobile rolled on. Presently the latter came to a stop.
 "We're there," said John.
 Anita did not move.

"Will you get out?" he asked.
 Anita shuddered, took her handkerchief from her eyes and looked about her. She was at her own front door.

Without a word she stepped down on to the sidewalk and, not deigning to notice her lover, went into the house. The elopement was over, and no evil consequences.
