SPRINGFIELD WINS AT LAST FROM EUGENE COLTS

In Rather Poor Game Springfield Wins from Eugene—Colts Drop First Game in Lane County League But Almost Make Garrison Finish

In a game in which every class of playing was mixed, the errors predominating, the Springfield Blues won Sunday afternoon from the Colts by the score of 7 to 6. The locals rallied in the ninth and brought three tallies over the rubber, narrowly missing tying the score when Paine, by a long throw from centre field, cut off Johnson at home. Some innings were of the one, two, three kind, but others were of the balloon type. Tallafero pitched a good game, though he weakened at the last, but DeNeffe was pounded badly throughout the whole contest, the first time this year.

In the nine chapter performance the Blues made a good entry in the third act, for Paine, first up, landed on the first cushion on a bunt mishandled by one of the amateurs backing the chief actor, DeNeffe, of Eugene. Two wild throws, one by Weed to second and one by Rube Sanders, the dark imported gardener back in the center of the stage, let Paine in. The curtain fell again with two strike outs.

Eugene followed in their inning with a similar trick, made possible by a mistake on the part of Peret and a safe hit by Johnson for two bags. Manager Smith, who holds down the sack at second, in the next act got to third on a bunt and a miscue by Whittaker. Peret flew out by sending the wrong kind of a ball to Moshburger, and Tallafero made three passes and walked behind the scenes. McClelland, however, by a lucky hit, brought in Smith.

With two men put back to the dressingrooms King and Marksbury hit two safe spots, and on one of Johnson's miscues, two more took the plate. Eugene, too, wanted some of the applause, and on an error, a sacrifice, a pass and a hit by Johnson, Whittaker landed safe on the plate before the audience. A mixup at first, at which Springfield hissed mightily, brought in Hobbs and Johnson, but the Sawmillers were not satisfied until the university man had been sent back to third. That ended Eugene's run annexing until the ninth.

In the sixth act on a hit, two errors, and a wild throw, Springfield made the Eugene fans sick by making two more tallies.

In the eighth the lads from the river town annexed their seventh run. In the last half of the ninth the Colts tried hard for a Garrison finish, but a long throw to the plate cut off the run which would have tied the score. And thus ended what was touted to be a most illustrious performance, but which proved to be full of halts and odd turnings. The score:

MANY THRESHING MACHINES BEGIN WORK THIS WEEK
Many of the threshers in Lane county are now out, and those who have not begun the season's work, will open soon. The grain crop in the main part of the Willamette valley in Lane county is said to be just fair. The fall grain ripened very early, but the spring grain has in some places held binding back until the present time.

The crops in the hills and close to them is said to be fine, for the dry weather seems to have affected the grain but little in those vicinities, the fields drawing moisture from the hills.
Up to threshing time oats in the county were scarce, and generally speaking the usual amount will hardly be threshed out.

My Wife's Courage.

I married a Washington girl who had become very intimate with the Ozenhoffs while they were there in the diplomatic corps. Ozenhoff had been second secretary of the Russian legation. The consequence was that when we went abroad on our wedding trip, although the subjects of the czar were in revolution, we must needs go to Moscow to visit the family whom my wife had promised to visit in case she ever crossed the big pond. I considered such a visit at such a time hazardous and objected. My wife pouted and said she wasn't afraid. That settled it; we went to Moscow.

It was arranged that Ozenhoff and I should "do" St. Petersburg while the two women stayed at home and had a good long visit together. Ozenhoff knew everybody worth knowing in the capital and would have given me a fine time there had not the very air been filled with bombs and blood. Our stay was suddenly cut short by the news that the revolution had broken out in Moscow. From my wife's courage in coming into the country I had reason to suppose that she would meet the situation bravely. Nevertheless both Ozenhoff and I started at once for Moscow.

Of course we found a terrible situation. The main question was how to get to his house, which was in the center of the conflict, and this, of course, made us frantic to reach it. By running several gauntlets we succeeded in getting into a house opposite his home and about a hundred yards farther down the street. But here we were stopped. The soldiers had taken a barricade built by the revolutionists, and a hundred rifles were ready to riddle any one crossing the street.

While we were there a man tottered into the house, a stream of blood running down the front of his coat, and Ozenhoff at once recognized him as his butler. The wounded man gave a harrowing picture of the condition at Ozenhoff's home. Mme. Ozenhoff and the children were much frightened, and my wife was in hysterics. Ozenhoff, who had been married some years, counseled patience, but I, not yet out of the honeymoon, was determined to risk everything to reach my bride. Yet there seemed to be no way except by crossing the street. Besides, if I reached the goal I should find the door locked and barred. But I knew there was a vestibule, and if I could get into it I might be safe. While I was trying to get away from Ozenhoff, who was holding me, I saw a man starting to cross. Spirits of smoke appeared at the barricade, and bullets whistled about him. He had got nearly over when he fell on his face and lay perfectly still. This cooled my ardor to be off, and I gave up the attempt. But later, when the fire at the barricade seemed to be turned in another direction, the man got up and made a dash for the house directly opposite him. He was successful.

I determined to adopt his plan. Ozenhoff, when he found he could not prevent me, consented and told me if I reached the goal to reassure the women and children by telling them that he would try to raise a force to make a long detour, approach the house from the rear and rescue them. As soon as I found my effort was a part of a plan I felt more eager to undertake it and, bidding my host goodbye, took position at the door, sighted my objective point and, suddenly emerging, ran like a deer.

I had got but a third of the way when the bullets came so thick that I knew I must be hit within a few moments and, plunging forward, fell on my face. A few more bullets whistled over me, after which the firing ceased. After a rest I sprang to my feet and sprinted again, but made only a short distance when I was knocked down by a bullet that passed through the calf of my leg.

I gave myself up for lost, for I supposed that my ruse had been discovered and they would put more shots into me. But after a moment I heard a fusillade from a house near by which seemed to engage the attention of the soldiers. Perhaps friendly revolutionists were aiding me. I jumped up again and, despite my wounded leg, ran to cover. I did not reach Ozenhoff's vestibule, but made a house on the same side of the street and, proceeding through back yards, soon reached his house by a back door.

I came upon Mme. Ozenhoff hugging her children to her, trying to quiet them. My wife was not there. I asked for her eagerly.

"She went upstairs to a window. I don't think she knew what she was doing."

I rushed up the staircase, and there in a room on a sofa lay the object of my search in a dead faint. I sprinkled her, and when she came to she threw her arms around my neck in a paroxysm of tears.

"I saw you run," she said, "and men in the opposite window saw me and you. They fired what it all meant and fired at the soldiers. Thank heaven!"

It was the next day before Ozenhoff reached us, and meanwhile we expected every hour that the soldiers would be re-enforced and go through the street, killing every citizen in it. Ozenhoff brought a dozen armed men, and, with great difficulty, we got out of our perilous position.

When I tell this story after dinner and refer to my wife's courage in going to Russia and cowardice while there, she says:

"Not at all. If I hadn't signaled the men opposite, you would not be here now."

Perhaps she is right.
