SPENCER BUTTE IS LIVELY RATTLE SNAKE COUNTRY

A rancher by the name of Hess on a branch of Spencer creek has killed this spring seventeen rattlesnakes. Last spring, however, he did better, for he slew twenty-four of the reptiles. Most of this year's kill was made in a den, but that there is still another in the same vicinity is conclusive from the fact that two young men while hunting jack rabbits killed eight or nine.

Spencer creek has long been known as a rattlesnake country. In fact there are many snakes all around Spencer Butte, for east and south of the main mountain a number have been killed this year.

In early days the country literally swarmed in places, according to old timers, but now there are comparatively few. This year, however, there seems to have been an unusual number of snakes, probably because Lane county is dry—a climate that the rattlers like especially well.

Last month one was killed a mile out of town in a dry ditch with a little water. The snake had come down to drink. It is not known how many rattles it had. Some that Hess killed had twelve, but most of them were young.

Judging from what is said the snakes around Spencer creek are of the more sluggish nature, and while as poisonous as the black mountain rattlers found so often in the Cascades, are not so energetic, and not so often looking for trouble.

and Spain to keep within the terms of the convention. The situation after the landing of troops at Casa Blanca will determine the subsequent measures to be taken by France and Spain. No outside power is expected to co-operate with the powers mentioned.

YESTERDAY'S NEWS FROM SEAT OF WAR

Tangier, Aug. 5.—The situation at Casa Blanca continues serious. Several vessels arrived here today, one carrying 250 Jewish and a number of French refugees, and another steamer with 545 persons on board, including many Europeans. They report the situation most alarming, the town still being in the power of the natives. All Europeans have been taken on board a vessel in the harbor.

In spite of the presence of a French cruiser in the harbor a large body of Moors attacked the refugees as they were leaving, but soon desisted, proceeding to the Christian cemetery, and dragging out a number of corpses from the vaults and began to burn them. A body of soldiers arrived on the scene and fired on the Moors, a number of whom were killed, and the band dispersed. The cruiser did not bombard, owing to the requests of consuls, who feared reprisals.

Oran, Algeria, Aug. 3.—French troops are being massed here and at points in the interior in readiness to embark for Morocco. Two French cruisers arrived today.

Toulon, Aug. 3.—It is announced that two more cruisers will leave tonight for Morocco.

Fight Against Child Slavery.

A. J. BEVERIDGE.

THE child labor problem has been brought to the front in America recently by the discussion in the senate on the subject, by the strong recommendations of Governor Charles E. Hughes in his first message to the legislature of New York and by President Roosevelt's letter by the Consumers' league of New York regarding the evils incident to the employment of those of tender years in industrial establishments.

The bill introduced in the senate by Albert J. Beveridge of Indiana has been much discussed in the press, and the question of the wisdom of national legislation on the subject has been raised. Some claim that it is a problem whose solution can best be left entirely to the individual states. Senator Beveridge challenged attention by his statement that there are now nearly 2,000,000 breadwinners under fifteen years of age in the United States and that of these almost 700,000 are engaged in work other than agriculture. "Child labor on the farm is good," says the senator. "This bill does not strike at that. It strikes only at child slavery in factories, mines and sweatshops."

Senator Beveridge's plan of getting at the child labor evil is to prohibit by federal statute any interstate commerce in articles which are the product of such labor. Some who recognize the force of the senator's arguments against child labor maintain that the states should be left to put reforms on this subject in execution and that his bill would, if enacted into law, be a step in the direction of centralization and an unwise extension of the federal power. In reply to these contentions Senator Beveridge urges that, while in some states there are good laws against child labor, in others the laws are either inefficient or poorly enforced and that the matter as a national evil can only be dealt with adequately by a national law.

Child labor laws exist already in many states, and in several new governments inaugurated in January made recommendations as to such legislation.

The factory inspector of Pennsylvania in a recent address stated that in the tobacco making establishments of Pittsburgh children as young as eight and nine years could be found at work. Missouri has an anti child labor law, but the labor unions are agitating for its amendment and more rigid enforcement of the statute.

Senator Beveridge illustrated his speech in the senate with photographs showing the conditions amid which children sometimes work. He points out that as the result of labor under such conditions many die, while others grow up dwarfed, crooked and weak, their minds dulled and clouded and their souls darkened and vicious. He maintains that many more children are employed in factories than the census figures show. The senator tells of a tiny girl seven years old who worked twelve hours a day in a canning factory in Maryland, a state having over 200 establishments employing children. John Spargo, author of "The Bitter Cry of the Children," tells of a little girl in Atlanta, Ga., who said: "When I work nights I'm too tired to undress when I gets home, and so I goes to bed with my clothes on."

The noted writer, H. G. Wells, says: "In Massachusetts little naked boys are packing cloth into bleaching vats in a bath of chemicals that bleaches their little bodies like the bodies of lepers. In the south there are six times as many children at work as twenty years ago, in Pennsylvania children of ten and twelve stoop over chutes and pick out slate, and in Illinois they stand ankle deep in blood, cleaning intestines and trimming meat."
