FOOTBALL TEAM

PLAYING IN HARD LUCK

SQUAD HAS BEEN REDUCED IN NUMBERS BY SEVERE SPLAINS AND BRUISES—ZACHARIAS AND TAYLOR PLACED AT HALF BACK—COLLEGE POLITICS BEGIN TO SIMMER.

The University of Oregon football team is playing in hard luck for so early in the season. Already the squad has been reduced in number by the men who are kept out of practice by bruises, sprains and other hurts. "Billy" Wood will not play for a week, and Kuykendall is disabled by a "charley horse" in each leg. Pinkham has been kept out for several days, and Coleman has not been well all the time. Swook and two or three others have failed to show up for similar causes.

In order to have a quarterback on hand if Kuykendall becomes unable to make his appearance, "Sharkey" Huston is out in a suit. Huston played on the freshman team of the University of California. There he is said to have handled his team with great skill, as well as playing like a fiend. Trainer Hayward saw him perform and believes that if he had kept on playing he could have made the California varsity.

During the last two or three nights Frost has been placing Zacharias and Taylor as half backs, and Clarke as fullback. Last night the combination worked remarkably well against the second team. All three men made repeated dashes through the line and around the ends, despite the efforts of their opponents. Taylor did much better than was expected. The interference seemed the best since the days of Bruce Shorts as coach.

Coach Frost has some new wrinkles up his sleeve for the varsity squad. Last night he brought out a charging machine, and for an hour the line men pushed it around the field. Its use strengthens the arms and shoulders of the player.

High's Debating League.

The faculty of the university has great hopes in the high school debating league which has been formed. They believe that the university, especially, will prosper by the league. At a meeting of the Oregon Teachers' Association in Salem in July, the league was organized. By November 1, the state will be divided into districts for the high schools to compete in, and sometime next June the winners of each district will debate at the university for the first honors.

The subject this year is, "Proportional Representation." The question may also come up in the interstate debates with Idaho and Washington, though the question dealt with the ship subsidy is preferred.

College Politics. Sometime in the near future freshman class meetings will be held. The fur will then fly, for there are a number of candidates now in the field lining up the voters. Report says that there are two Portland men, a Eugene man, and an aspirant from some other place, all desiring the honor of president.

The election this year seems to be a real bit of college politics, and the office seekers, though youths, employ much the same methods as the genuine American "boss." It is rumored that they will subtly buy votes with ice cream treats as well as trading.

The Junior class also is working up its election, though more quietly. In that class a man is making a hard fight for the votes of the "co-eds," which hold the balance of power, and other candidates for president are rounding up their friends.

Cat Time Coming.

In the pre-medical department at the university cats and dogs will soon be in demand. The students last year had great difficulty in securing specimens, and scoured the town for the finest "Toms" and the fattest Pussies.

Already the thoughts of the pre-medical student is turning toward cats, and in a short time they will be crawling the streets and alleyways by moonlight picking up some one's poor kitten. Of course, they are supposed to pay for the animals, but students often run out of money about cat time.

Anyone having a cat which they want to meet an easy death, just notify some of the students. The cats are chloroformed and suffer no pain. A few darts are also desired.

Varsity Items.

The debating societies organized Saturday night for the year's work. President Campbell, Professor DeCou, and Dr. Gilbert addressed the Philonian society and Professor DeCou and Dr. Leonard the Laureans. The Laureans elected the following officers: President Grover Kestley; Vice President, Bolton Hamble; Secretary, Clarence Steele; Assistant Secretary, Ben Williams; Treasurer, Walter Easton; Counsel and Editor, Ben Huntington; Sergeant-at-Arms, Carey V. Lassely.

Robert Nelson has been appointed manager of the basketball team. Sidney Smith, the former manager, resigned in order to go into business. Saturday Manager Kestley and a number of men marked off the football field, and began the erection of a fence on the north side to hold the crowds at games.

Ormond Bean, a Eugene boy, is manager of the track team this year. He expects that Olson will again be champion of the Northwest next spring in track work.

The first "rotary" rally was held this afternoon on Kincaid field. New yells and songs were tried for little effect.

Two In One.

I met Esther Norman at the Springs. There was a certain sadness of expression about her that drew me to her. Had she not been very young—she was twenty—I think it probable that her face would have borne the impress of suffering. As it was, she looked like one who had suffered, but whose features, having the softness, the pliancy of youth, did not harden under the soul.

I liked to be with Miss Norman best when she was active, for then she seemed to forget herself and be what she really was. Or was she then what she was not? I could not decide. What puzzled me was that, though she was one of the best appearing young ladies in the house and it depended only on her whether or no she should be a belle, she seemed indifferent to attention, or, rather, the attention she received seemed to inspire in her no enthusiasm. There is a delicate distinction in this which it is difficult to make plain.

We had been together at the Springs for a month when one day while we were on the lake I began to make love to her. I had no intention of doing it when I began. I fell into it. I was pulling the boat, she sitting facing me in the stern. As I proceeded she turned aside and let her hand hang in the water. She made no reply to anything I said, but presently I saw tears. Dropping my oars, I placed myself in a half sitting, half kneeling posture, took the hand that lay on her lap and said:

"This is not the way to receive words such as I am speaking to you. It should be either with indifference or smiles. Tell me—explain."

Then the tears came in a torrent. She drew away her hand and bowed her head in both hands, sobbing as though her heart would break. In vain I implored her to tell me the cause of an emotion so strange under the circumstances. I asked her if she could not respond to the love I had spoken. She was mute. Then she raised her face, asking me with an imploring look to desist. I went back to my oars and in silence rowed to the landing.

We walked toward the hotel through a wooded path. Midway she stopped and faced me.

"Don't love me," she said with intense earnestness, "unless you are willing to love death in life. One had better love a corpse than me. A corpse is dead in all respects; I am not. She who was I died, and I remained. She was as innocent as a babe; I am not, for there are times when I would curse God and die. She and I are twins, yet one is pure, while the other hates a world bent spinning in space, its people without the power to detect, to separate the good from the evil. Better a ship under full sail without a rudder!"

"Be calm!" I interposed, laying my hand on her arm. She was trembling like a leaf. "Tell me what you mean."

"What is a court of justice? A legal tournament between the prosecuting attorney and the defendant's counsel. And our what hangs the prisoner's fate? Circumstances and witnesses. And if the circumstances can't be explained, and if the witnesses have a motive to lie? Worse! At every celebrated trial one half of the people who read the testimony believe the prisoner guilty; the other half are uncertain. But a very few believe her innocent. If she is acquitted, those who believe in her guilt stum her because she is to them a criminal, while the rest stum her because she is regarded as a criminal. She goes forth with the brand of Cain upon her brow. She can never again be her former self. If she has friends, the moment they know of her twin sister they turn away from her. If she has a lover, as soon as he knows, the words of love die upon his lips. Would to God that—"

Her words were choked by a paroxysm of tears. As soon as she could again find her voice she finished:

"I am Martha Blake."

I had read the testimony in the case of Martha Blake, one of those mysteries, puzzles, that seize upon the intellects of millions and will not let go till they have either formed an opinion or decided an opinion to be impossible. I had more than formed an opinion; I had felt certain that Martha Blake was a murderer. I stood aghast, while she turned away and buried her face in her hands against an oak tree. The act produced a marvelous impression on me. Here was an inanimate tree more merciful than I, a human being. The woman I had professed to love was supported by its strength instead of mine.

"I never knew Martha Blake," I said. "I have known and loved Esther Norman. This blow is too crushing for me to rise above it once. It has pleased Providence to try me possibly more than my strength will bear. I must have time."

Instantly her equanimity returned to her. We walked slowly side by side while she dried her tears till we came near the hotel, where she pointed to a path that led in another direction; I understood and took the path, while she went on to the hotel.

I never saw either of the twin sisters again. When I returned to the hotel after hours of wandering in the wood she had left. The few words as to her trouble she had spoken to me told me—not the words, an indescribable something that accompanied them—that she was as innocent of crime as I. I never sought her, but I am now an old man, and I have never married. I shall never marry.
