AMUSEMENTS

An appreciative but disappointing audience in point of numbers attended the hand concert and recital at the Eugene theatre last night. The band selections were up to the usual high standard of the organization's performances, perhaps even better, because the program had been carefully arranged and evidently well rehearsed. Mr. J. J. Hughes' clarinet solo, "Sounds from Home," called for a hearty encore, and the solo by Miss Dare, "Good Night," accompanied by the band, was a distinctive hit. The words are by Frank L. Stagon, the Southern poet, and Professor Read, director of the Eugene Military Band, arranged the music, this being its first rendition in public. The music is remarkably adapted to Miss Dare's fine voice, and the song would undoubtedly become widely popular if published. Regarding Miss Dare's work it may be said that the audience was not disappointed in her numbers, although they had been led to expect much from the published press criticisms. Her ability as a vocalist and pianist. They were even more pleased than advance promises had led them to expect. She possesses a rich, rare voice that shows thorough artistic training. Her recitation, "The Stampede," was extremely well rendered, and in the lighter number, "I'm married now," her versatile ability was clearly manifested.

The large crowd that gathered at the Deadwood theatre to witness Calligan's Nashville Students went away well pleased with the evening's entertainment. The play was one great round of wit, humor and fun, which kept the audience in an uproar of laughter.

The music and dancing was of an exceptionally high class, and while every member of the cast deserves great credit, Sheldon Henderson deserves special mention. Mr. Henderson is a good young comedian of the Bert Williams type, and rounds of applause greeted him with every appearance on the stage, while his singing of "Nobody Has Troubles Like Me," and his acting and expression in "A Few Rambling Remarks" brought down the house. He certainly made a hit with the audience last night and undoubtedly has a bright future before him.

The whole play was clean from start to finish, and the company should be greeted by a good audience wherever they may go.—Deadwood Daily Telegram, April 23.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

High finance has probably gone into seclusion to take the gold cure.

Choose your friends judiciously if you would not have them use you maliciously.

What most of us want is the kind of money that will stay by us like a farm hand by the buttermilk jug.

People who make a great ado about being just before they are very generous are very seldom either.

Sorrow must be a good mariner, as it stands a great deal of drowning.

There is only one thing more treacherous than memory, and that is the owner of memory.

A sour countenance is never worn with a sweet disposition.

We always feel that the landscape is disagreeably decorated when certain people are about.

Versatility of expression as well as quick thinking is acquired when one has a large and extensive acquaintance with bill collectors.

When you pause to drop a sympathizing tear don't forget to also drop a comforting dollar where it will do the most good.

No doubt the trusts have several billion dozen of opportunities put away in cold storage to work off upon us poor, inoffensive mortals when the psychological moment that we just have to have them comes.

Vain Regrets.
Of all the combinations fine That just occur to me There's one that rather holds the edge Over any that I see. I think the experts would agree That it would be all right To be a millionaire and have A small boy's appetite.

When winter holidays come round And spread their gloaming board The person thus equipped could then Get action on his board, For he could gently lead himself Up to the goody store And there for once procure so much He wouldn't ask for more.

He'd have a turkey large and plump In front of every plate. If things were only so arranged That he could pay the freight, And as for pies, a generous piece Of every kind that's made Would be, when it was time for pie, In front of him arrayed.

Too bad it is in this vain world Things are adjusted so. For when he has the appetite He doesn't have the dough, And when he has the cash to hand He has, so I have heard, An appetite that well might fit A small canary bird.

Invariably, "What kind of a prince is a merchant prince, papa?" "I don't know what kind of a prince he is, but I know what kind of a merchant he is."

"What kind?" "The kind that always sell below cost or at a great bargain"

Preferred That Shada.
"The pot and the kettle were having their usual argument." "Black old thing!" said the kettle as a clincher.

"Well, I am thankful for one thing," said the pot, looking at its copper neighbor—"no one has ever accused me of being yellow."

Just For the Credulous.
"He thinks he has a fortune in a sure cure for baldness." "But will it effect a cure?" "Of course not. Do you think he wants to spoil his own game? If it cured a man he never could sell him another bottle."

To Supply the Need.
"I wonder who invents all of the new words that slip into the language from time to time?" "That is easy to explain. When a plous man hits his thumb with a hammer he can't swear, and he has to say something."

On a Cash Basis.
"I don't think much of Congress man Blank." "But he says he is a friend of the common people." "Sure and he wants them to pay him a salary for it."

In His Line.
"He isn't riding the poutles today." "No; he is sick." "What ails him?" "A bad cold."

"Oh, I see—a horse jockey."

Campaign Prospects.
"What is he doing for a lying now?" "Waiting for next year."
