REPUBLICANS AIDING CHAMBERLAIN'S ELECTION

About thirty Republicans of this city met last night, organized a campaign club and declared in favor of supporting only such candidates for the legislature as are opposed to Statement No. 1 of the primary law. This mode of procedure is being followed in all counties of the state, the aim being to place in the United States senate, not the choice of the people as expressed by a majority vote at the general election, but the man favored by politicians of the Republican party. Thus they place their own preferences above those of all the people and expect the people to ratify their assumption of dictatorial power.

There is a great deal of newspaper talk about the condition of the Republican party in Oregon and what caused its humiliation and defeat. The answer is found in just such movements as that started in Eugene last evening. It is not "Chamberlain's luck" or Democratic shrewdness—simply the inability of the Republican leaders to grasp the significance of the wide-spread movement toward popular government, as expressed in the provisions of the primary law. The self-appointed leaders who meet and fix up slates and [illegible] policies have no following. [illegible] Lane county only Statement [illegible] men will be elected to the next legislature, and they will be Democrats if the Republicans persist in [illegible] public sentiment and popular [illegible]. If Governor Chamberlain really wants to go to the senate he should encourage the organization of Republican clubs opposed to the election of United States senators by the vote of the people.

When the Republican leaders of Oregon finally come to realize the truth of Abraham Lincoln's homely saying, "You cannot fool all the people all the time," they may return to power in this state and not before.

PROFESSOR YOUNG ON WATERWAYS OF NORTHWEST

The American Academy of Political and Social Science has just issued a pamphlet entitled "Columbia River Improvements and the Northwest," by Professor Frederic G. Young, of Oregon State University. The article is written in Professor Young's clear, interesting style, and is [illegible] historical and descriptive, and [illegible] wide distribution will be of great [illegible] to the Oregon country by attracting attention to its resources as well as its needs in respect to national legislation. In concluding Professor Young says:

"The area drained by the Columbia river and its tributaries comprises [illegible] 250,000 square miles. While there is more waste area in this than in an equal area of the Mississippi [illegible], it must be taken into consideration that some of this and in wide-[illegible] sections is selling at $1,-[illegible] an acre. The additional value [illegible] will be given to this vast area by [illegible] will make the cost of the improvements of the Columbia [illegible] very small. That improvement [illegible] operation many [illegible] wait only for the pres-[illegible] of reasonable transportation facilities to spring into life. The extension of irrigation enterprises will only equalize the flow of the streams in a salutary way for the interests of navigation. With the waterways of the Columbia basin open, as the expenditure of a reasonable sum will suffice to improve them, the Pacific Northwest will equal in wealth any other most favored section of like area in the country.

"With the projected improvements completed, and a few more minor ones on the upper Columbia, the Pacific Northwest would have transportation facilities comparable with those that will be possessed by the Trunk line territory when New York's project for making a ship channel of the Erie canal is completed. What the Pacific Northwest system would lack in the size of cargo it could float it would make up in being a more direct route and in being available during more months of the year."

The Sacramento Bee observes that shooting in a restaurant is always unseemly and in bad form, as tending to disturb the digestion of the other frequenters of the place who escape the bullets. Yet one cannot help but admire the nerve of a New York woman who fired five shots into a man in one of the Gotham restaurants and then three into herself, and what is more, she never missed a shot. The man was killed on the spot and the woman died one hour afterward. There isn't one woman in a hundred thousand that can shoot like that outside of melodrama.

One of the head men of the Japanese empire rises to explain that the magnificent preparations for war being made by the people of that nation are not intended for the United States. We are glad to hear it. Not on our own account solely, but somewhat in behalf of the Japanese themselves. In a scrap with America the brown men of the Orient would find that they were not dealing with Russia, nor yet with the Chinese. And we are not underrating the fighting ability of the Japanese in making this assertion, either.

The post-card business is attracting the attention of the postal department. A million post cards are mailed every day in this country, and about 60,000 a day go to the dead letter office where they are burned, such cards being of an objectional and obscene character. The post-card craze has become widespread, and some of the pictures are unfit for some old people to look at, to say nothing about the children. Yet, in legitimate and decent lines, post cards are all right, and should be encouraged.

We take it that in some respects both sides of the house look alike to Congressman Nelson, of Wisconsin, who declared in a speech attacking the rules that the minority were "absolutely helpless," and that the majority "have to obey the will of the speaker"; also that, though he is a Republican, Mr. Nelson is not a Cannon man.

The horticultural edition of the Medford Tribune, recently issued, was a splendid special number devoted to the fruit-growing interests of Jackson county. It was well gotten up and profusely illustrated, making it a splendid advertisement for Medford and its tributary country.

Political button-makers have picked Bryan and Taft and Hughes and Johnson for the National "big four" and their factories are turning out buttons by the thousands. It isn't sentiment, but business with them, and they have made some shrewd guesses in past campaigns.

THE LEAP YEAR REFUSAL

'Tis very kind, indeed, of you
To offer to become my wife;
To say you love me as you do
And wish to share my simple life.
But do not grieve at what I say,
Dear Maud, I really love another;
In anger do not go away—
I will consent to be your brother.

I'm sorry, Maud, I really am,
That you have learned to love me so;
For me you should not care a—darn;
For I never meant to be your beau.
Your husband, Maud, I cannot be,
My heart belongs to another;
I'm sorry you've proposed to me,
But I can only be your brother.

If you should ever want a friend,
I trust that you will send for me;
On me you always may depend;
I'll come to you, where'er I be.
Surely there is some better man
Who'll gladly take you for his wife;
So find him—I'm sure you can—
I'll be your brother all through life.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY AS IT WAS, IS NOW

In looking over some old letters in an ancient box the other day I came across one tied with a faded bit of lavender ribbon and sealed with wax, as was the custom before envelopes came into use. The missive was yellow with age, but the writing was as clear as if written but yesterday, and was traced by some fond swain in the year of our Lord 1815. The address on the outside was "To Mistress Demerey Crooks, Yorktown, Virginia, Bayview Farm." The postage was paid in coin, for it was so written.

On the outside of the letter was a jasmine blossom, pressed so long ago, yet I imagined I could catch a breath of fragrant odor from that sweet Southern blossom. The writer of the letter wished to convey to Mistress Demerey, his "dearest ladye, proof of my enduring affection," and signed himself "Yours with greate love, deare ladye, Usual Warford, Waford Manor, London county Va., 14 February 1815."

In the letter was a valentine inscribed to the young colonial lady, "Mistress Demerey Crooks, my valentine." There is a picture in it of a lovely girl; her face is sweet and fair, her golden hair in curls, as was the fashion of those times, hung over her shoulders; she held a white dove in her hands and seemed to be speaking to it, while at her side stood Cupid looking up coyly into her face, and at the same time kept his bow and arrow ready for action. There is a verse in old style as follows: "Sweet ladye fayre, wilt thou bee mine, thou blossoms rare, wilt bee my Valentine?"

The custom of sending valentines dates back to at least fifteen hundred years before Pepy's time, when the Roman youths used to meet on the feast of Luda Falia, and put the names of the village lassies into a village urn, and then each was claimed by the fortunate drawer of her name.

It is said by authority we respect that "in the days of Lamb, that on each February fourteenth neighbors and friends met, and that the names of the ladies assembled were put on slips of paper and placed into a receptacle, from which the men drew them out one by one, and the lady each drew was his valentine for the year." One man caused much merriment when he drew his wife's name; the old sinner says "it will cost me $5, but it will keep the money in the family, for that sum I must have laid out for a present, if I had drawn another for my valentine."

Today, in the twentieth century, St. Valentine's day enjoys the inward spiritual grace it did in the early years of 1800, or as far back as 1600, but the outward form has undergone many changes, as the illustrations of those years will show.

Valentines have touched the hearts of our best writers, as one may find from the writings of Lamb, of Chaucer, and of Shakespeare, as well as many others. Some of those of our forefathers' time are quaint and sweet, and must have caused many a heart to beat the faster as she realized it was she alone who was chosen as the valentine by the one whom she loved best in all the world. It is good that Valentines are still in use; it is one of the dainty customs of the ages when chivalry reigned and which today conveys the wishes or the sentiments of the donor to friend or sweetheart. Both sexes interchange the dainty missiles on February 14 in this year of grace 1908, with the same spirit that prompted the happy swain and gentle lady in the centuries of the past.—Exchange.

SOME PERTINENT QUESTIONS FOR MACHINE POLITICIANS

Eugene, Oregon, Feb. 11, '08.

Editor Guard:—What cause have the papers, or any individuals for that matter, to assail Statement No. 1, as it is now being assailed? In what manner has it proven injurious to the interest of the people? Rather is it not a weapon in their hands to compel submission to their will? Are not legislators more apt to carry out the people's will, when they are bound by this pledge, than when they are not?

If a constitutional amendment permitted election of United States senators by direct vote, would not the person so chosen be their representative? Then is not the endorsement of a senatorial candidate as much the choice of the people, and is he not entitled to represent them at Washington as well as if they were able to elect him without the medium of the legislature? Do not the same people who elect the legislators give endorsement to the senatorial candidate?

It seems to us this has been rather a one-sided discussion until the Guard took the matter up and handed out a few facts to be digested "by whom it may concern." Of course, if Statement No. 1 is wrong it should be eliminated from the law, and we believe all well-thinking men would join in urging its repeal. But we believe as the Guard suggests that if the matter were referred to the people in the coming June election the decision of four years ago would be sustained. We do not believe, as suggested by some of the press, that the defense of Statement No. 1 comes from the Democrats, Independents, and unstable Republicans. The writer hereof, is a Republican from the ground up, and we do all we honorably can for the success of the Republican ticket from Precinct Constable to Presidential electors. We are also the kind of a Republican who believes in majority rule and that the will of the people should not be ignored. We believe all this assault against Statement No. 1 comes from the fear that some man like Governor Chamberlain may stand as candidate for indorsement and who would be very apt to invade the Republican ranks for enough votes to secure it, hence the desire to ignore the pledge. But whether or not the legislative candidates stand upon Statement No. 1, they are in duty bound to elect as Senator that person who has been endorsed by the people. Any other course would be an affront to the citizenship of the state, and would be equivalent to saying, "The people be damned—they don't know what they want—anyway."
