SKYSCRAPER TO BE ERECTED BY EUGENE ODD FELLOWS

At last night's meeting of Spencer Butte lodge No. 9, I. O. O. F., a vote was taken to decide whether or not the proposed five-story brick building should be erected, and the proposition carried. It was also voted to sell the three-story brick building owned by the lodge on Willamette street.

This enterprise has been on foot by the lodge for several months past, and has been mentioned by The Guard from time to time, but no final decision was reached until at last night's meeting. The next step to be taken will be to secure plans and specifications, and then bids for the construction of the block will be received. Work on the structure is expected to begin early in the summer.

The new building, which will be the tallest business house in Eugene and in the valley south of Portland, will be located on the northwest corner of East Ninth and Oak streets, the lot having been purchased by the lodge about three years ago from C. S. Frank. A two-story frame building now occupies the lot and is known as the old Rhinehart building.

Architect Hunzicker has drawn preliminary plans for the building, and while the permanent plans may differ in some points from the preliminary sketch, the latter gives a good idea as to how the building will appear when completed. It will be 55x114 feet in dimensions, fronting on East Ninth and Park streets. The first story will be of solid plate glass and will make a magnificent room for a large dry goods or any other kind of a store. There will be a large vault on this floor. The building will have a full basement, in which will be located the steam heating plant.

The second floor will contain ten suites of office rooms, two rooms to the suite. There will also be a vault on this floor.

The third floor will contain eleven suites of rooms, two rooms to the suite, and a vault.

The fourth floor will be used for a lodge hall, with all the modern appointments and the fifth floor will eb used for the banquet hall, with kitchen, pantry and other conveniences.

The building will be equipped with a modern elevator, and in fact with everything that constitutes an up-to-date office building. It will be completed, according to the calculations of the promoters of the enterprise, so that it can be occupied late next fall. The cost of the structure has not been fully estimated, but the lodge has a pretty fair idea of the amount that will be expended on it.

BOURNE WOULD BET THAT TEDDY RUNS

Washington, Feb. 26—"I'll bet $5,000 President Roosevelt is nominated by the Chicago convention," suggested Senator Bourne, of Oregon, to Senator Elkins, of West Virginia, when these two legislators met in the White House.

"You're wrong" said Elkins.

"Well, where ... your money?" continued Bourne, reaching into his pocket, as if to drag out a ... bill.

"I'll not bet," muttered the West Virginian, "but if I thought you had that much money on you I would throw you down and take it away from you."

But no bet was made.

COMMITTEE DECIDES AGAINST FORAKER

Washington, Feb. 25.—That the shooting affray at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 12-13, 1906, was done by some negro soldiers of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, and that the testimony taken by the senate committee on military affairs fails to identify the guilty persons is the opinion of eight members of the committee. Four members of the committee voted against this decision, and one member did not vote. The resolution declaring the guilt of the negroes was submitted to Senator Lodge and was adopted after five resolutions by Senator Foraker, one by Senator Dupont and one by Senator Scott, all of which were offered as substitutes, had been voted down.

TWO ROADS FIDDLING IN SOUTHERN BENTON

Monroe, Feb. 25.—Monroe has no formally organized booster club, but every Monroe man is a booster from the ground up. There are here a creamery, a flour mill, one of the largest general mercantile establishments in the state, a fine school building, two churches and a cannery.

A railroad is badly needed.

Carver has ordered his latest survey to be made in a southwesterly direction from the Barclay line, and should the line be built there it will leave Monroe two miles away to the south. However, it is thought by some that it is only a tactical move designed to put the people of Monroe into the mood for a substantial bonus to have the road extended to the town, and that the line will ultimately be built on south to Junction.

The Southern Pacific does not undervalue the potential traffic in the lumber now standing in the great forests around the upper Alsea and in the Lake Creek country, and the road will be provided with a spur into these regions should the main line be run through the upper Willamette valley.

The surveyors are this week to locate the line up Muddy and will probably pass through the ranches of A. Zierolf, W. F. Starr, Charles Cartwright, Mrs. Ingram, Emil Howard and J. Bailey. From the latter place—on which it is reported a station is to be made—the line will extend in a southerly direction and go across the pass into Alsea and upper Lake Creek.

How a Marine Slipped His Cable.

Ensign Peabody should have been in the navy a hundred years ago, when the men were treated more like brutes than human beings, instead of today, when every sailor, whether officer or seaman, has his rights. But there are natural tyrants who are by nature tyrannical, and Peabody was one of them, though he kept within the regulations, using insult instead of committing a violation of an officer's restrictions.

Tom Spencer was a marine on board a United States cruiser. He was a good soldier, always spick and span and was well educated. The reason for his enlisting in the marine corps was that he hoped some day by good conduct to secure a commission. For some reason or other Peabody conceived a dislike for Spencer. Some said the reason was that Peabody had been appointed to the academy from the gutter and it had failed to make him anything but a gutter snipe, while Spencer had enlisted from the parlor and could only be a gentleman. Be this as it may, whenever Peabody got a chance to put the screws on to Spencer he did it in as irritating and disagreeable fashion as it could be done. There was a fire smoldering in Spencer's breast which nothing but the mutiny laws could keep from breaking out into a volcanic eruption.

There had been a liberty party on shore and some of the leave men had got into a fight with the natives—the cruiser was lying off the coast of Peru—and when they returned Peabody was officer of the deck. Spencer was one of them and gave evidence of his part in the fracas by having his uniform torn to shreds. Peabody seized upon this to storm at him and, his hatred getting the better of his discretion, used a common opprobrious epithet in connection with Spencer's mother. Like a flash the marine's right arm went out, and the ensign went sprawling on the deck.

Here was a case of mutiny. In some of the world's navies even in time of peace to strike an officer means death. The penalty is not so severe in the United States navy, but it means imprisonment. Spencer was put in irons and charges preferred against him.

It was in the hot season, and there is no telling how long a time may elapse before a man may be brought before a court martial. It was probable that Spencer would either be sent home under guard for trial or would be held till the cruiser went north. It was too hot to keep him between decks for an indefinite time, and he was given the liberty of the ship during the day, only being put into the brig at "pipe down." The ship's master at arms was made responsible for him and watched him to see that he didn't get away to shore.

It was a grim prospect for the prisoner. The insult he had received would be no palliation for his offense. He might have preferred charges against Peabody, but on no account could he have taken the law into his hands. Instead of a commission, he would doubtless get at the least calculation dishonorable discharge and several years at some naval prison. He was the picture of woe as he lounged about and an object of sympathy with his shipmates, who hated Peabody.

Spencer, who was in the social scale far above his comrades, had but few intimate companions. His only chum was Bob Sawin, whose father was a captain of a merchant vessel. Bob was a great scapegrace and generally conceded to be the most reckless man on the cruiser.

The trouble on land had subsided and liberty parties were again going ashore. They usually left the ship at four bells in the evening. One afternoon Sawin put in an application for liberty. There was a young ensign aboard who had been ill ever since the cruiser had left United States shores, and on this very afternoon he had returned to duty and was officer of the deck. It was his part to call off the names of the liberty party.

When Sawin's name was called, Spencer, well got up in his best uniform for shore leave, stepped forward, with a "Here, sir," saluted, went down the ladder and took his place in the launch. The ensign didn't know him from any other marine. There was suppressed surprise on the faces of the men who knew well enough that Spencer was not Sawin, but never a man spoke, and when the party was checked off the cutter bore them, Spencer sitting in the stern sheets, to the dock.

Meanwhile Bob Sawin was hiding under a tarpaulin on the fo'c's'le. There he remained till darkness spread a friendly mantle far more to the purpose, then let himself stealthily down by the anchor chains, dived, swam under water as far as he could hold his breath, came to the surface and swam to shore. The next morning he returned with the party in Spencer's uniform.

Spencer as soon as he found himself ashore made for the mountains and within a few days was lost to any searching party that might be sent for him. He had some back pay stored away in his pockets, by means of which in time he returned to the United States. He was not missed aboard ship till the master at arms hunted for him at "pipe down" to put him in the brig for the night.

When the Spanish-American war came on Spencer enlisted in the army, distinguished himself and came back a captain. Either before or after the war he succeeded in getting his naval slate sponged off, so that he could begin in United States service again. This he did through a relative who was a congressman.
