HARRISON, HUMAN OSTRICH, IN TOWN

MAN WHO EATS NAILS, GLASS AND KNIFE BLADES, IN EUGENE AND WILL APPEAR AT THE ORPHEUM

Happy Harry Harrison, the "human ostrich," who eats nails, glass and other delicacies of a similar nature, will appear at the Orpheum theatre tonight and throughout the week. He called at The Guard office this forenoon and gave an exhibition of his work. He took an ordinary horseshoe nail, bent it double and with the aid of a glass of water swallowed it. He also swallowed a large brad and then broke a blade out of the city editor's knife and swallowed it. This made us sore, for we had to spend thirty cents for another knife.

Harrison is certainly a wonder and there is no fake about him. He offers to donate $50 to any charitable institution in Eugene if his exhibitions are proven to be anything but genuine. He is willing to go to any physician's office and have the X-rays turned upon his stomach to prove that he really swallows the article.

The Strand magazine, published in London, some time ago contained a long article about Harrison's feats in this line and printed several of his photographs in connection.

MINSTRELS AGAIN LARGELY ATTENDED

The second performance of the Elks' minstrel Saturday night was greeted by another very large audience. The program was changed somewhat and some who attended both say the performance Saturday night was better if anything than the one Thursday night. Prominent among the new features of the performance Saturday night was the solo, "School Days," by W. C. Jackson, assisted by Master Stiles and little Miss Winona Waddle. It brought forth enthusiastic applause and Mr. Jackson was compelled to respond several times to encores. The quartet, consisting of Messrs. Van Dusen, Cooper, Nelson and Paine, was a new feature and a good one, too. Dr. Paine as interloper, filled his position very gracefully. We failed to mention him, through an oversight, in the writeup of Thursday night's performance.
