Humor and Philosophy By DUNCAN M. SMITH PERT PARAGRAPHS.

A great many men admire diligence, and when the diligence resides in others and they get a good fat rakeoff their admiration amounts to an obsession.

The less you know a man the more may you assume an acquaintance of men in general and freely speak your mind to him.

Many people spend their gray matter trying to dig out a creed that does not call for anything resembling a deed.

The only quarrel we have with difficulties is their perfectly horrid habit of being familiar.

A good way to keep friends is not to need any.

Probably the power of coming quickly to a decision does as much to save friction as the power to sign a check.

There is no use in trying to dodge an issue, for issues are notably as nimble footed as Mercury and as persistent as Satan.

The reason some of us don't want to make footprints on the sands of time is because the style of shoes change so soon and we hate to be on record in an out of date model.

All things are possible to the man who has a future and many are impossible to the chap who has accumulated a malodorous past.

Fear makes us afraid, and the only grain of comfort lies in the likelihood that it makes the other fellow afraid too.

Sometimes a cynical disposition ends in a sinical exposition.

The Annual Spasm. A song of spring! Pray, who does not appreciate the lass Or say she goes tripping by. "That lady has some class!" We all with one accord accord To hear the foremost prize And whisper in a pleasant voice That she is just our size.

Some other seasons, we have heard, Are fairly well supplied With qualities which lend them charms That cannot be denied. Let others rave about the fall And o'er it fume and fuss, We serve due notice that the spring Is good enough for us.

With cherry blossoms in her hair And blessings in her hand, She gently saunters down the road And smiles to beat the band. Then every one due notice takes, And every mother's son Who rubbers at her says in glee, "Ah, there, my pretty one!"

Yes, spring is all the Christmas cake, The candy and the pie, She worms herself into our hearts, She likewise takes our eye. We like to see her come around "The verdure to renew, And, seeing her, we almost say She's too good to be true.

Shy on Relatives. "Poor man, have you no brothers, sisters, cousins or nieces?" "None at all." "No aunts or uncles?" "Come to think of it, I have an uncle."

"Is he kind to you?" "Oh, very! He lets me store my overcoat with him every summer."

Expert Better. "I see the expert says that one will never be attacked by a lion as long as one can put a chair between himself and the king of beasts." "Looks simple."

"It is simple." "Say, I wonder if a mountain would not do as well."

Life. When life is young And joy is brave We let it tongue Nor in a cave Easy to hide The vital thing, Both far and wide We gladness fling.

When life is old And love is kind The mirth we hold, With griefs combined, Then hermits we And vainly yearn For joy and glee To make return.

Baffled Then. "You think you understand women?" "I know I do." "In every instance?" "Well, I understand them except when they try to sing. Then I would defy a language expert to understand most of them."

Call's Most of Them. "When I put my hand to the plow I don't turn back." "I would hate to see you tried out on a just as the dinner bell rang."
