SPRINGFIELD COW

MOTHERS A COLT

COLT'S OWN MOTHER CASTS IT OFF AND IT MADE FRIENDS WITH OLD BOSSIE

Springfield, Oregon, has a real freak, and if Teddy Roosevelt cries "nature fake" a dozen citizens of that place threaten to send him picture postals of their curiosity, says the Portland Journal. The freak which is bringing the little Oregon town into the limelight is a 2-months-old colt, which is being mothered by a cow. The colt's mother refused to recognize it, and on wandering around the barnyard the little fellow made friends with a good-natured bovine, whose calf had been weaned for several months. The owner of the cow, glad to have the trouble of raising the disowned colt shifted on the butter producer, cut her out of the dairy herd and now the oddly assorted pair can be seen roaming around the grass patches. The cow is very much attached to its adopted foundling, and when a stray dog attacks it immediately shows fight.

Pictures of the colt and his foster mother were brought into the Journal office by W. L. Harris, a Southern Pacific engineer. Mr. Harris received a postal card from his sister in Mexicala, Mexico, the other day. On the card was the picture of a colt which was being raised by a young lady on a bottle. Mr. Harris had a postal picture of the Springfield colt printed just to show his sister that Mexico isn't ahead of Oregon even in the production of freaks.

MOHAIR MARKET DROPS STILL LOWER

Two regular sales dates of mohair pools have recently passed without a satisfactory bid being received. In both instances the pools were transferred nominally to a member of the pool and another sale will be arranged later when the situation becomes clearer. The fact that there is no demand for mohair around the prices quoted last year cannot be understood by most sellers. Most of them profess to believe they will secure a better price than in 1907, but in this view they stand alone for conditions are entirely unlike.

In the open market mohair buyers are feebly bidding 18 and 18 1/2c a pound for the product, but they do not seem to care whether they secure the supplies or not. This compares with the price obtained for the Dallas pool in recent years as follows:

1907, 30c; 1906, 30 1/2c; 1905, 32 1/2c; 1904, 24c; 1903, 38 5-8c; 1901, 22c; 1900, 29c; 1899, 33 1-3c; 1898, 30 1/2c; 1897, 21 5-8c. It will thus be seen that the prices ruling today for mohair in a nominal way are the lowest offered by manufacturers in 12 years. It will likewise be noted that for 5 years the price of mohair has been annually showing a loss in this state. According to one of the larger buyers, the price of mohair at this time is so low that it is indeed good speculation.

BUYERS AND GROWERS CAN'T GET TOGETHER

While the shearing season is well under way in every section of the Pacific Northwest, but a very small portion of the city has thus far been sold. In fact, the sales to date are the smallest for this period in many years. Buyers are showing an inclination to hold aloof because they believe they can buy for less in this way. On the other hand, growers have their own views of the market and are not pushing their product. It is likely that for this reason alone most of the wool in the Pacific northwest this season will be handled through the regular pools on scales days.

The following are the days upon which the regular sales will be held in eastern Oregon this season: Arlington, May 23; Pendleton, May 25 and June 8; Pilot Rock, May 26 and June 9; Heppner, May 29 and June 11; Vale, June 7 and June 23; Baker City, June 24 and July 11; Elgin, June 25 and July 9; Condon, June 19; Shaniko, June 2, 16 and July 6.

ORCHARD PREFERS DEATH TO PRISON

Boise, Idaho, May 4.—Claiming that life at the Idaho penitentiary is far worse than death, because other prisoners refuse to have anything to do with him, and that he is completely isolated from human companionship, Harry Orchard has expressed the hope that the Idaho board of pardons will not interfere with the sentence of death pronounced by Judge Wood.

The board of pardons meets tomorrow in special session to consider the case, and unless favorable action is taken on the recommendation of Judge Wood, Orchard will be executed on May 15. Orchard's attorney will present to the board the recommendation of Judge Wood, and it is understood no one will appear before the board to protest against commutation of sentence. The board is composed of Governor Gooding, Secretary of State Lansdon and Attorney-General Guheen.

The Case of Jones.

Jones at the age of twenty-eight was a mechanic and working every day at fair wages and happy to work. A year later he married. A year later still he lost his wife and babe as the former became a mother. Then he got into trouble with his union for working overtime, was expelled from the society, and during the next year it was a bitter fight with him against odds. The shops turned him down, his health became poor; there were more laborers than there were picks and shovels. He was carrying in a ton of coal now and then or carrying out a ton of ashes, when he got in the way of a street car. He wasn't killed. Indeed, he wasn't badly hurt, but a policeman took it as a bit of impudence on his part to interrupt traffic, and he was collared and sent up for thirty days. In one sense the imprisonment was a great relief to Jones. He got something to eat and got it regularly. When night came he got a fairly comfortable bed. In another sense he felt degraded. His keepers and most of the other prisoners would have laughed at the idea, but it was nevertheless true. He had made a good fight for it and had been downed through no fault of his own, and he had done nothing to deserve imprisonment. It humiliated and embittered him, and when his sentence had been served he had lost his self respect and had a feeling that the world was against him.

From that day Jones became a hobo. He tramped without any particular aim except wanting to get somewhere. When he went among the farmers the usual thing was to set the dog on him as soon as he entered the gate or climbed the fence. If there was no dog, then the farmer came forward to give the hobo the boot. For every one farmer who fed and lodged him fifteen turned him away. The latter thought it necessary to call him names and threaten him and make him feel his position. The former demanded that he pay five times the value of the food in work, and when he got ready to move along they insisted on searching him to make sure that he wasn't carrying off a plow or the contents of the granary. Now and then, at long intervals, Jones met a human being, man or woman. They talked to him as one human being talks to another, and for an hour after he would feel himself again a man. Then along would come a rountry constable to run him in on suspicion of having stolen a wagon load of wheat or potatoes and abuse him because the proofs were lacking.

For five years Jones wandered over the face of the earth. In that time he met more people and saw more of human nature than the ordinary man would see in living two lifetimes. In particular he saw the littleness of his fellow men. He discovered that for every broad minded man there were a thousand with pinched and contracted souls. He heard gospel and scandal and lying. He saw the injustice of man to man. He saw so little that was good and so much to condemn that, hobo as he was, he became disgusted and no longer wondered why hogs crowded each other at the trough.

One day he picked up an old newspaper on the highway and sat down and read, among other things, that a certain philanthropic old lady had founded and endowed a home for the ailing and indigent. Jones had known for a year past that he was a victim of consumption and that his tramping days were drawing to a close. Sometimes as he lay under a tree and thought of it he reasoned that the roadside ditch was good enough for a tramp to die in. Again, there would come a longing to have human beings about him when the end came, to die under a roof, to die in his bed, even to have to talk with a minister before the lamp flickered out.

A month later Jones was asking for admission to the home. He was then a human wreck, and his days were numbered. Yes, they took him in, but the attendant in his ward gave him warning that if he made any trouble he'd get the bounce. The same attendant asked him in the frankest manner why he didn't die somewhere in a snowdrift instead of coming among his betters. The doctor didn't look him over. He said there was no need of that. A one with ears on had to listen to that racking cough.

His excellency the doctor further remarked that there was no need of wasting good chicken broth and port wine on that case and that he supposed there was a coffin in the basement to fit. The nurses in that ward had a great deal of gossiping and very little nursing to do. At first Jones wanted this and that and even dared to call out at night and awaken the sleeping nurse, but after a few days, after he had been talked to a few times, he learned better. One day when he asked for the minister he was laughed at. They did finally bring him a Testament, but by that time his eyes were too weak to read the fine print. He realized that the end was near, but was clinging to life as even a hobo will when he heard the nurse complaining of his base ingratitude. She argued that he ought to have died a week before and that his banging on the way he did showed a selfish obstinacy.

Jones figured it out that the nurse couldn't very well poison him off or choke him to death without attracting suspicion, and that night as she slept, after warning him not to call out, he gave up the fight, and his soul passed on to its Maker. Exit workman, husband, wife, child—Jones. And the world rolled on as if they had never been.
M. QUAD.
