JOSEPH JACOBS
ARRESTED AGAIN FOR SELLING LIQUOR

WEST EIGHTH STREET MERCHANT "PULLED" SATURDAY NIGHT — ARRAIGNED THIS MORNING AND WILL ENTER PLEA IN JUSAIICE COURT TOMORROW MORNING

Joseph Jacobs, the Jewish merchant whose general store is on West Eighth street, between Olive and Charnelton, was arrested Saturday night by Policemen Graham and Purdy for selling liquor in violation of the local option law. He was lodged in jail for the remainder of the night, the officers refusing to accept a bond at that time. This forenoon he was taken before Judge Bryson, of the justice court, and arraigned. He was given time to enter a plea, and he will do so tomorrow morning at 9:30 o'clock. He has furnished a $500 bond to insure his appearance at that time.

Jacobs has been in trouble for this offense before, and was once fined $200. If he is found guilty this time it is probable that he will be given a heavier fine in addition to a jail sentence, as this has been the practice of the court in recent cases. Jacobs is alleged to have conducted a blind pig at his residence on Charnelton street. At the time of his arrest Saturday night the officers saw several young men come out of the house with several bottles of beer under their arms.

When I bought my country place I made an offer for it and everything on it just as it stood, and the deed was thus made out. The house was 150 years old and there was some very old furniture in it, including a clock reaching from the floor of the hall nearly to the ceiling. It had not kept time for many years. The works were rusty, and the pendulum, which had been detached, stood in the corner of the case. While the party from whom I made the purchase and I were looking at the old clock he gave me the following reason for the pendulum being in that position: He said that there was a tradition that one of the former owners of the premises had been warned that the clock would foretell the hour of his death. How this ghostly information was to be conveyed was not designated, but the warned man, hoping to disarm the ghost, detached the pendulum and set it in the corner of the case. One night in autumn, when the winds were blowing and the rain falling, he was lying wide awake when suddenly the old clock in the hall below began to tick. What induced him to count the strokes from the very first one he didn't know, but he did count them till the three thousand five hundred and fortieth stroke, when a sudden sinking sensation came over him, and he called for assistance. He died one minute later, or on the three thousand six hundredth stroke—that is, in exactly one hour from the first stroke.

I thanked my informer for this gruesome tale and told him that if he would verify it I would sell him the property I had just bought from him for one half what I had paid him, but the days of ghosts had passed and such stories no longer affect people as they once did.

Nevertheless, conscious as we are that there are existences beyond our ken, one must be superstitious. The seed had been planted in me, and often afterward when I lay awake at night I would fancy the slightest sound to be the tick of the old clock. I was tempted to sell it, but, in the first place, my wife greatly valued such

When I came to myself it was coming dawn. I was weak as a kitten. I wished to get up and call a servant, but had not the strength. Later I heard one in the hall and called. A doctor came, my wife was telegraphed for, and—well I was not out of bed for a month. When I went downstairs again the old clock was not there. My wife had removed it.

Six months later one rainy night I heard the ticking or tapping again. I awakened my wife and called her attention to it. She listened for a moment, then said:

"Is that what threw you into collapse?"

"Yes, the same sound."

"You silly man, that's nothing but dripping water."

I would not go to sleep till I had made an examination and had verified her statement.

The old clock, cleaned and repaired, stands in the hall, to my wife's great pleasure, but I don't fancy it over much.

CAN THE EUGENE HUSBAND STAND FOR THIS?

The director gown that has been shocking the police and creating havoc in Paris and London is headed for this country, says the Chicago Tribune, which gives a description from a Chicago dressmaker as follows:

"It is ample," she said. "The gown is all on each side from the knee down, and underneath the woman wears trousers, just like a man. It is pretty and nothing could be more modest. I see that the foreign dispatches tell about the women's stockings showing through the slits. That is possible. Of course, in such a case the woman leaves off the trousers. That is all a matter of taste."
