ed his speech shortly after 7 this morning, thus extending by several hours the record of length of time of continuous effort on the floor of the senate. He was succeeded by Senator of Missouri, who held the floor until noon when a recess for thirty minutes was ordered. Following the example of LaFollette, Stone spoke briefly and read copiously from extracts from public documents and newspapers bearing at times directly and at other times very remotely upon the question before the senate. Stone spoke in such a low voice that there were many protests to the speaker's tone, but none of them more than a temporary effect.

The attendance was not large, some of those present having been in their seats since 11 o'clock yesterday.

How long Stone will talk no one will undertake to say, but he will be followed by Gore, the blind senator from Oklahoma. As he is unable to read himself it is certain he will not receive unanimous consent from others to read for him.
