EUGENE ENTERTAINS MANY VISITORS TODAY

Eugene is today entertaining many visitors, among them a large delegation of Portland businessmen. We trust that they have had a good time and enjoyed the hospitality of our people to its fullest extent, but more than this, we hope that they have seen many things in the way of development and growth in the Willamette Valley of which they were not aware before coming to Eugene. Those among them who have not been here since the new growth of the city and tributary country began will realize the great changes that a few years have made, from which an opinion may be formed of the great possibilities of the future.

Such social visits as the one the Portland men are making here today are beneficial in many respects. In a business way the entire Willamette Valley will always be largely dependent upon Portland enterprise, and that city's business men owe it alike to themselves and the state at large to become aquainted with those sections, upon the development of which its future growth and greatness depends. On an occasion like this they become acquainted with the people and learn of their wishes and desires, their hopes and aspirations. They find such towns as Eugene being pushed ahead by enterprise and energy of their people, and then discover the real reason for Portland's wonderful growth and prosperity. The larger this and other cities of the state grow, the more business there will be for Portland, the latter city growing only as fast as the development of its trade area warrants. The conclusion is that the meropolis of the state should aid in every way possible the efforts our people are making toward building a city, confident that we must always pay tribute to Portland, and we believe that those business men who are here today will carry away a full realization of this fact.

What we need most is harmony and good feeling between all sections of the state, to enhance our efforts to make a Greater Oregon, in commerce, in wealth, in population. And these exchanges of social courtesies tend only to promote good fellowship and unselfish state pride and patriotism.

GROVER CLEVELAND, DEAD EX-PRESIDENT.

Grover Cleveland is dead. The rugged old man around whom has centered more of criticism and praise than has fallen to the lot of any other president, has passed away full of years, and at the end, full of honors. Derided and abused for his policies by his numerous enemies, praised without stint by his supporters during his second term as chief executive, of late years he had grown wonderfully in the public esteem. It is conceded that in spite of the bitter and strenuous criticism directed against his policy in general, it was best for the country at large, although at the time radicals found no language of condemnation too strong for the expression of their disapproval. Looking back over the gap of years we are all see now, though few of us will wholly agree with all that he did, that it was fortunate the country possessed in those parlous times a president strong enough to be at least outwardly insensible to criticism, who could not be controlled by partisan influence; who was cool and deliberate in the midst of panic and public disquietude.

The country will sincerely regret the death of one of its greatest citizens, and with one accord share the grief and extend their sympathy to the noble patient woman who is widowed today. Mrs. Cleveland represents the highest type of American womanhood, and holds a place in the hearts of the people that few mistresses of the White House ever enjoyed.

WHY A COLLEGE COURSE IS DESIRABLE

At the annual recurrance of commencement season, and at many other times we often hear the question asked, should a young man or woman go to college? This question is discussed a great deal and many are the arguments advanced for and against a college course. As to the propriety of it let it be said that it all depends on so many circumstances that a direct answer is impossible. That every young man or woman should go to college is just as nonsensical as that no one should go at all. Real genius is independent of all conditions, and hence some of the world's greatest men never entered a college door. Such was the case of Abraham Lincoln. It always seems to us that a college education would have spoiled him and crippled his rare genius. But all such men have a training of some kind and equal to a college education.

But on the other hand, all other things being equal, a college education is necessarily of great value. Because a few or many college graduates are failures in most of the attributes of real manhood, is no argument against the college. If they go into college as impracticables, as a rule they will come out the same. A college developes, but does not create. It is an artificial institution and not a supernatural one. The question of going to college or not can only be solved by knowing the man or wman, the college and the circumstancese incident to the case. Here, as in all cases, every tub must stand on its own bottom. Individuality must be consulted. Many persons will not take an education any more than some coarse, rough stones will not take a polish. To attempt to educate them is to throw away time and money. It is to encourage false ambitions and to breed disappointments. On the contrary, supposing the possession of a good mind and character, there is nothing that can add to its power and usefulness like a college education. Here the mind is taught to work. The foundation may be laid for all future growth and development. A college education of the right kind and in the care of the right person is capital invested and well invested. It is not simply a money investment, but also a mind and heart investment, and brings pleasure and enjoyment to all subsequent life. Hence go to college if it is practicable.

The Oregonian today has an editorial on the University and its relation to Eugene and to the state that contains much that is pertinent and timely. The Guard endorses its position in general, but desires to call attention to the fact that local pride and interest—call it a sense of ownership if you please—cannot be entirely eliminated from the question. Naturally in a town the size of Eugene such an institution becomes interwoven with all its very life and the residents, without really thinking of its significance to the state at large, feel that they have a special interest in it and act accordingly, just as they did in the late referendum campaign. This would be true of any community as well as Eugene, and we believe the people here were not actuated as much by selfish financial considerations, as they were by a pride in the University and love for it that was the outgrowth of long and close association with its work, its teachers and its students. This being the case such indiscretions as the issuing of the card with the offending wording taken as a text by the Oregonian, might well be overlooked by the state at large. Certainly, we all realize that in a business way Eugene made [illegible] its lumber mills, [illegible] and horticultural resources [illegible] University [illegible]

[illegible]

Sambo: "Got dat shoe on dar fer luck, Rambo?"
Rambo: "Guess not; got him on dar fer Peter. His muel done kick me an' I can't affohd t' keep one."

[illegible] tions, show that the Salton Sea in the Colorado desert is evaporating at an average of from six to eight inches per month, and that the existence of that body of water is having no appreciable effect on climatic conditions on the desert. To prevent water from the river flowing into the Volcano Lake country and then menacing the Imperial valley through the New river, the railroad people are building a levee about ten miles in length and twelve feet in height. By this means the overflow will be turned away from Volcano Lake.

Some persons think it a mystery that notwithstanding good advice their boys grow up to be wild and reckless young men. If these boys were taught from infancy that home was the proper place for them after dark, rather than prowling around the streets, much of this mystery might be explained, and young men with better moral character and more intelligent minds would be the result. No parent need expect pure morals in a boy that prowls the streets at night, even if he does go to Sunday school.

An Iowa editor was rotten-egged the other day because he said uncomplimentary things about the graduating exercises of the local high school. Served him just right. A fool editor who so far forgets himself as to deal in criticisms regarding the work of local amateurs deserves all the punishment that can possibly be given him. There are some things that better be left entirely alone, and this is one of them. If there is nothing to commend, say nothing, but it is never safe to condemn.

Of course it had to come. Some crazy, woman-hating cynic charges that it is only the curveless women who are shocked by the revealing "sheath" gown. Of the charge we know nothing, but with curves on sale everywhere, it's a wise man who can tell a curveless woman when he sees her.

We don't mind acknowledging that it was a bad break in failing to put a plank in the platform demanding that women's hatbrims either be made narrower, or the edges be cushioned. However, there'll be another chance in Denver.

This rumor that the north pole has disappeared need not worry anybody. It is probably in the possession of some campaign club and at the proper time will be used to fly a flag bearing the names of the winners.
