STATE TEACHERS CONVENING IN ANNUAL SESSION

EIGHTH ANNUAL CONVENTION OF WESTERN DIVISION OF ASSOCIATION MET TODAY.

ELWOOD P. CUBBERLY, PROFESSOR OF EDUCATION AT STANFORD UNIVERSITY, PRINCIPAL SPEAKER TODAY—PROGRAM IN VARIOUS DEPARTMENTS FOR TOMORROW.

The real wealth of the nation is in its men, in their ability and steadiness and the maintenance of their lives is the most worthy occupation in life," said Elwood P. Cubberly, professor of education at Stanford University, in the opening address of the eighth annual convention of the western division of the Oregon State Teacher's Association this morning. Four hundred teachers were present at the opening, representing the army of educators, which is making the children of Oregon into the men and women of tomorrow.

In another portion of his address, the speaker said that "a man used to be educated when he could read, cipher and write, but today that state is past." The man of the day must have a knowledge of art, literature, and things of life.

The subject of the address was "The Changing Conceptions of Education," and to show the difference of the present from the past, the speaker recited the whole history of education the world over, particularly considering general methods.

In the United States immigration from the south of Europe, congestion in cities, factory work and similar industrial changes give the educator new problems which must be faced. One new principle in the United States has been that property of the community should be taxed for the support of schools for every individual. In the forties and fifties of the last century great bitterness was invoked from the struggle over this question, but now in every state the principle is fully recognized.

Another movement of the present day is the reduction of the number of pupils under each teacher. "No school can have the best results when the instructor has fifty pupils," he said. "Once it was that one teacher would have five or six hundred pupils, but that day is past."

In New York the city offers the children a free university education, and most states follow the same plan. A new conception of education.
