ONING CRIMINALS AND ITS ABUSE.

g the late campaign in this everal newspapers attacked or Chamberlain's record of y toward criminals. Little n was paid to the subject at me by the press in generally of the political motive that d to be behind it. However, more than a suspicion that tendency exists not only in te, but elsewhere toward a s and leniency in the matardoning criminals.

maudin sympathy expressed men and some men toward ls or those accused of some crime is usually considered manifestation of an abnormal nt which verges on hysteria, e is an illogical and mistaken toward criminals suffering erms of imprisonment, exby men usually of well-balnerals.

who commits a cold-blooded and is sentenced to imprisonlife, should not be pardoned. have a good record as a prishe may even have honestly erely repented of his crime ay be conceded, for the sake ent, that he would no longer nace to the community if algo at large, but the argugainst his release are based ounds which are not effected facts.

purpose of punishment for ould never be for motives of it should be base upon two and two only, the prevensubsequent criminal acts uppart of the criminal himself deterrent effect upon others. t does not require any labgument to show that this efe latter instance is seriously d when a practice is made of g criminals, and especially se of those serving a life sen-who commits cold-blooded deliberately puts himself out pale of human sympathy; he ot be treated with cruelty or ss, but he should expiate death or by life imprisonlease from which should be the results of his crime. rongest argument in our e only argument which can ed as even partially tenable, of capital punishment exists t that the frequent misuse ardoning power serves to the dread of punishment on of the prospective criminal. s not immediate death even red and convicted, and relythe probability of a pardon, ew years, he takes chances would be disinclined to know that life imprisonsane, meant life imprisonreality.

artment of a law to the efen convicted of murder in degree should not be parder any circumstances, since subsequent legislald be able to appeal it, but sentiment was sufficiently and expressed with unhesiness and clearness weakecutives and careless legislo would cease turning the community men who convicted of the crime y God can forgive, and of the influence upon the nal class, which is one of purposes of punishment.

SUFFRAGE AND MORAL ISSUES

. Peake, of the Ohio state convention, in his address ed that "the weakest laws the liquor traffic are in the woman suffrage states of Colorado, Idaho, Utah and Wyoming." His statement as an abstract proposition is irrefutable; but his inference is wrong. We who live in one of those woman suffrage states are not prepared to accept the implied charge that the women of the state are responsible for the condition referred to, says the Boise (Idaho) Statesman. The men have run our politics. They have named the tickets, written and adopted platforms and devoted much of their time during the campaign to confusing the women as to real issues, and, in some instances, with success.

The manner in which moral issues have been received in woman suffrage states has been called attention to on numerous occasions by those who view the propositions from a distance and in concrete form without having knowledge of local conditions. They have not understood that moral issues might possibly have been advocated by men of such a character that the women of the state could not but detect their transparent insincerity.

The point is one that our political leaders should not lose sight of. They must couple their moral issues with moral advocates. They must place on their tickets men who harmonize with their platform declarations, and in whom the women of the state have confidence.

CROP ROTATION NEEDED

Soils of the Willamette valley are famous for their fertility. Almost anything can be grown with the proper attention, and because this is the case, farmers do not farm scientifically and are fast robbing the land of its strength.

Year after year, for twenty and even thirty years, the same crop has been grown on the same ground. There has been no attempt made at rotation of crops, no effort made to keep the soil from exhaustion, and season after season the earth grows poorer, robbed of the elements that make it a profit producer.

There are fields that have grown corn for ten consecutive years. There is land that for still longer has never failed to yield a good return in wheat. There are thousands of acres that for a score of years have produced one crop a year, though the yield per acre is lessening perceptibl

In horticulture this section excels. Few regions can show such commercial orchards so scientifically cared for. But in agriculture it is way in the rear, and unskilled farming will soon make all farming unprofitabl

To conserve the strength of the soil, so that each year it grows a more profitable crop than the year before, is the lesson farmers must learn and practice if they would keep their farms in an up-to-date way, so that they will yearly increase in value.

A writer in the Philadelphia Press contends that gossip in the country villages is not nearly so prevalent as it is in the so-called best social circles in the cities—nor is it so vicious. The unkind word, the slanderous word, the character-assassinating word, make up a great deal of the small talk of people of small minds and corrupt natures.

Governor Willson has refused to call an extra session of the Kentucky legislature to pass temperance legislation, as demanded by the Southern Methodist conference, on account of the expense involved. So the seductive mint julep may still be had by Colonel Watterson without leaving the state to get it.

The holder of the optimistic medal should forward it to Lincoln, as Mr. Bryan earned it when he said: "You can't pick a state in which we don't have a chance." But come to think of it, Frank Hitchcock said about the same thing, too.

Utica hadn't got over congratulating itself upon being the home of "Sunny Jim" before it discovered that it was also the home of a man who had stolen money from a hospital and an orphan asylum to speculate with.

It was a real philosopher who thought out this bright idea: After you have advertised your business "more than you can afford," for a while, it becomes a harder task to do that—for you come to be able to "afford" so much more than formerly.

"No lady should smoke cigarettes," testified a defendant in a divorce suit, and then admitted that she had smoked a few now and then. No wonder Mr. Taft advised a class of young lawyers to let women witnesses alone.

Chicago is shouting with glee and New York is gnashing its teeth with envy because of the practical demonstration of eternal hustle presented by the former when a girl baby was born on one of its street cars.

If a resident of Eugene—should there be one of this kind—happens to tell you that he takes no stock in "boosting," only ask him if he will sell his property for the same price he would have two years ago.

This Pennsylvania jury which found a man guilty of assault and battery for kissing a girl against her will sets a troublesome precedent, if all the kissable girls should take a notion to act on the tip.

Kansas politicians are said to be wondering if the Missouri man who has offered to clear the sunflower state of wolves and coyotes within a year, for a price, meant to be personal.

Whether it indicates an increase of decency, or merely that they have been threshed out, we are glad to note that the doings of Harry and Evelyn Thaw no longer occupy first-page space.

Peter Widener, the traction magnate, says prosperity is on its way. Some grouchy fellow will be sure to express the hope that it isn't traveling on one of "Pete's" back-number cars.

Peary may not reach the north pole on his present dash but he is to be envied in one respect—he'll escape the hot air blasts that the rest of us will get for several months to come.

It's about time to organize a "50,000 Club" in Eugene. This talk about a city of 25,000 is altogether too modest for a town that will pass the 15,000 mark in another year.

Everybody must admit that Bryan's running mate—John Worth Kern—is a man of Worth, and if they do not soon get to calling him "Jack" we will be surprised.

The people of Eugene have a right to throw back their heads and walk proud, since they are all stockholders in a big corporation—the municipal water plant.

San Francisco is employing expert cowboys as mounted policemen, for the especial duty of lassoing automobile scorchers. Sort of roping them in, eh?

The contractors and builders, the carpenters and bricklayers, of Eugene are too busy to take a summer vacation this year.

Our hottest weather here in Oregon would be regarded as a mighty good summer resort brand if they had it back East.

Cincinnati is due to get a lot of first-page advertising, not connected with beer or sauerkraut, during the next four months.

Since Mr. Taft said he was hopeful of getting the electoral votes of Virginia no one can doubt that his hope apparatus is in good working order.

INCREASE CAPACITY OF CORVALLIS SAWMILL

H. C. Mahon, of the Sunset Lumber Company, was in town Wednesday, and in company with Manager Samuels, looked over the Corvallis sawmill property. A complete remodelling of the lumber yard at the mill has been decided upon, and the changes are now being made. There is a possibility that in the near future the capacity of the mill, now 30,000 feet daily, will be increased to 100,000. It is said the new capacity can be provided for at a comparatively small expense. Logs are now arriving down the Willamette in large numbers, 100 having come into the boom Wednesday night, and a large number last night and today. The main body of the big drive is expected by Monday.

The mill will resume operations Monday, and will be in constant activity hereafter. It is a happy circumstance, as it will at once tend to relieve the present strained condition with respect to the supply of lumber.—Times.

DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve is especially good for piles. Recommended and sold by all druggists.
