The city police have broken the hearts of a dozen boys whose homes are in Fairmount by prohibiting swimming in a favorite hole in the mill race across the railroad track from the University. A fine new springboard has also been torn down, which was erected at the expense of 50 cents. The reason was that the boys, who of course always attend Sunday school and church regularly, were making of themselves public nuisances by using the environs without any screens as dressing parlors.

PLANS READY FOR CONTRACTS IN MONTH

ENGINEER KELSEY REPORTS A PERMANENT LOCATION SURVEY FOR WATER SYSTEM BELOW HENDRICKS' BRIDGE—HE FOUND EXCELLENT ROUTE

"Plans and specifications for the gravity water system between Ritchey creek and Eugene will be ready for the contractors in thirty days," said Engineer Frank Kelsey, who returned this afternoon from a trip to Hendricks' bridge with a party composed of city councilmen and Mayor Matlock. The surveys under McArthur and McClain are now on this side of Hendricks' bridge with the permanent location survey. The survey will be completed next week.

Engineer Kelsey also reiterated his faith in the gravity plan. Measurement today of Ritchey creek shows that fully 5,000,000 feet of water is going over the weir during the day. For a city of 10,000, with 80 per cent using the water, 2,000,000 feet will be sufficient during the hottest season.

Besides Ritchey creek three other streams which may be conveniently tapped are now under measurement. All are on the same side of the McKenzie as Ritchey creek.

Mr. Kelsey walked down over the proposed routes from Hendricks' bridge to this city today, and found an excellent route with only three angles between the bridge and Springfield. He was accompanied by Engineer McArthur. The route above Hendricks' bridge is more difficult. The plan for entering town is now to cross the river at Springfield, come down the stream to Thirteenth street, and down through town—connecting the line with all the mains that the big pipe meets. In order to avoid tearing up any pavement, the line would skirt around the paved district, and be joined with the mains on both ends. Connection will be made with the reservoirs, which will take all the surplus water that comes through. The overflow will go into the river, and the reservoirs will be kept for reserve in case of accident or fire. Mr. Kelsey said there is no reason why the pipe line service should ever go dry.

MRS. HUMPHREY LEAVES EUGENE

Mrs. Humphrey, the woman who walked all the way from Portland to Eugene, wheeling a pushcart before her with her two little children and her belongings in it, has left Eugene—anyway the house rented for her on South Willamette street by the good citizens of the city is empty. It will be remembered that a number of citizens took up a collection for the woman and rented a house for her. Her boys worked a while, but lately they have been doing nothing, saying they could find no work. It is said the woman sold all her household belongings which the citizens donated to her to Manville & McKinney, the Ninth street second-hand dealers.

After Taking Notice

The silence? How could you help it? Say. It is around everywhere—in the highways. And the back lot. Everything is hushed. And subdued. As a lady of forty-five summers Giving consent To her first Proposal. You bump into it. Mixed with some burnt red paper. Everywhere. You turn. Silence. Deep profound. And all pervading. Treasure it. For it is all that is left Of our grand. Glorious. And ear splitting Fourth of July Celebration. Of course. There are a few Burned fingers. Shortened thumbs. And bandaged eyes To help serve as a reminder Of the day. But the real And true hallmark Which proves that it has gone hence. Is the silence. Listen! Isn't it sweet music After the din Of the firecracker. The toy pistol and the giant torpedo? Before it is all used up. We feel like saying again, "Pass the silence."

Proof. "How do you know he is a brave man?" "I have seen him prove it." "How?" "I have seen him go blithely home to his wife at 3 a. m."

SUICIDES AND ATTEMPTS TO DROWN CHILD

Mrs. Tressa Markley, wife of Norman E. Markley, both former residents of Eugene, committed suicide at the foot of Walker street in Lake Washington, at Seattle, yesterday evening by jumping into the lake after having thrown her seven-year-old daughter in first.

Mrs. Markley's mind has been affected for some time. The little girl fell in shallow water and waded to shore, where after an hour of wandering and climbing up the steep bank she was picked up by a kind family and she told her tale.

The body of Mrs. Markley was recovered soon after in the lake. Norman Markley, who was formerly an attorney in Eugene, was wild with grief. His wife was the daughter of Mrs. M. J. Drew, of this city. At the police station he said he had left Eugene for the benefit of his wife's health, but the change had done no good.

There is little doubt but that the suicide was altogether due to insanity, for the girl said that her mother had that morning turned on the gas to suffocate her child and herself, but she (the little girl) had realized what was wrong and turned it off.
