It Is Not Advertising Which Survives; But the Things Which Are Advertised

THE "cleverest advertisement" you ever wrote may be quite forgotten now, even by the best friends it made for you. It may survive only in the bigger store it helped create. But it is just as certain that the bigger store of the future is to grow out of the advertising of the present as it is that the store as it now stands is the result, in large measure, of your "forgotten" advertisements. You have preserved the results of advertising. You must create new results through new advertising.

Heart to Heart Talks.

By EDWIN A. NYE.

IN THE DENTIST'S CHAIR.

The tortures of the Spanish inquisition are not entirely of the past.

The modern rack is the chair of the dental surgeon. The difference between the chair of the Spanish dungeon and the dentist's chair is mostly as to the upholstery.

One goes to the dentist for an examination or cleaning of the teeth. He may be one's best friend. In his torture chamber he is your dearest enemy. "Hah!" says the inquisitor. "What have we here? Two fillings. We must have another appointment. How would tomorrow, say 3 o'clock, suit you?" It suits you—like an invitation to be lugged.

You go out from the presence of the dentist a changed man. Your nerves are jangled like sweet bells out of tune. An ominous thing—"3 o'clock tomorrow"—looms ever on the horizon of your subconsciousness.

One climbs with a ghastly smile into the hateful padded chair. Adjustment of the towel is like putting the noose about the neck of the wretch to be swung off. First is a skirmish, a premonition of the real thing when the smiling villain picks brutally into the decayed spots with a pickax. And now he begins his murderous job—the grinding out of the holes. Ugh! You cover and flinch and grunt. He is hunting for and finding the place where you live. And you are "at home."

Afterward comes the hammering of the gold with a sledge hammer. Ugh, but this is a hard way to acquire riches! The rascal is forcing the metal on you. He has such a supreme disregard for your finer feelings. It really isn't fair to hammer a man when he is down.

There! All over—but the polishing.

That process seems the worst of all because it comes on the top of your two hours of human grief. It looks a surplus piling on of pain. He is so careless with his wheel in the vicinity of sore and mangled gums.

Finally the agony ceases. As you rise from the chair your first impulse is to paste the dentist over his left eye, but you remember, "Faithful are the wounds of a friend." You touch the gilded plates with your tongue. You feel a whole man again. There are no surplus holes in your headpiece, and it may be a year before other fillings are needed.

What is the moral? If any, it is on the surface, a job of optimism—namely, this is a good world to live in, after all. You laugh a thousand times where you grieve but once.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our thanks for the many beautiful floral offerings, kindness and sympathy shown us during our sad bereavement.

What a pity Hobson won't be there to see.

"It for tat" is an old and very human game. The labor leaders having gone to politics, the political leaders are now going into labor.

Of course Mr. Tall's record-breaking speech of acceptance will not be followed by the usual letter—he did not leave anything to write about.

This New Jersey man who periodically sheds his skin is doubtless related to the fellow who periodically sheds his political opinions.

To judge from recent publications all the army officers of the world are determined to go up in the air—in balloons.

A LETTER TO WIFE.

I took a meal with Mr. Green. His wife is sure a splendid cook. I'm glad that you enjoy the scene. Where did you hide the button hook? I hope you'll have a jolly time. And gain in health while you are there; I'm sure you need the change of climate. But tell me where's my underwear?

Dear wife, since you have been away. It is a lonely life to lead; By ten o'clock I want to say, I am in bed. I'm good indeed, I did not linger at the club. My conduct is not such that shocks I'm growing sick of hotel grub. For heaven's sake, where are my socks?

The rubber plant I've watered well. I keep the parlor windows shut; I'd be all right if you could tell Just where the can opener was put I hope the rest will do you good. So far I haven't had the blues; I'm growing sick of hotel food. Where did you hide my Sunday shoes? —Detroit Free Press.

THIS IS MY 30TH BIRTHDAY

J. C. W. Beckham

J. Crepps Wickliffe Beckham, former governor of Kentucky, was born near Bardonia, Ky., August 5, 1869, and received his education at the Bardonia Academy, and at the Central University of Kentucky. For several years after graduating from the last-named place he taught school in Bardonia. He then began the study of law and was admitted to the bar in 1898. The same year he was elected a member of the Kentucky house of representatives. He was twice re-elected and was chosen speaker of the house in 1898. In 1899 he was elected lieutenant-governor, becoming chief executive at Governor Goebel's death, February 3, 1900. The same year he was elected governor for the full term, ending in December, 1907. In 1906 he was nominated in a state primary by the Democratic party as candidate for United States senator from Kentucky over James B. McCreary, the incumbent. In the general assembly, however, Mr. Beckham was defeated.

to those who business in that line here.

"Don't expect too much of the newspaper that is ignored by you; spend your money with it and you are not likely to want full measure from it; it's a poor newspaper that does not invariably exceed the demands made upon it in matters of public exploitation, and is a grave blunder to overlook or neglect it. Fair play to home business and home advertising and home celebration is quite as essential as in any other line of home effort, and in such and all the home effort, and is entitled to just, and first, consideration always."

And regarding the newspaper business there are many other matters that it is worth while to call public attention to. For instance it is said frequently that a certain town "supports" one or two newspapers. Nothing could be further from the truth. Newspapers are no longer objects of charity but have come to be real business institutions, conducted along the same lines as other commercial enterprises. They sell news and advertising space at fixed prices, and both have become staple commodities. The Guard, for instance, pays out $1650 per month (double what it was two years ago) for running expenses, largely in the salaries of well-paid employees who in turn distribute it among the business men. This money is gathered up all over Lane county and much of it comes from a distance in subscriptions, advertising and job work, so that Eugene, instead of "supporting" a paper like The Guard, actually derives a revenue from it just as it does from any other manufacturing plant—a woolen mill or a sawmill. It is a payroll enterprise that contributes to the growth and prosperity of the city. Not only that, but the larger and better newspapers become the more widely the town is advertised, attracting home-seekers, increasing the volume of business and enhancing property values.

And yet there are some business men who never patronize a newspaper. They advertise on dead walls and get the little stationery they use printed by cheap Eastern shops, but throw a fit when some customer sends to a mail order house for a bill of goods. Possibly their inconsistency comes from the fact that they have never thought of these things; at least it is charitable to suppose so.

A press dispatch of yesterday asserts that it has been proven that a human being can live without brains. A friend at our elbow suggests that he became convinced of that fact through reading the editorials on the water question in the morning paper. Wonder what he meant?

Bring mice and women together and there will always be something doing. The lady members of a Pennsylvania church choir have gone on a strike because they saw mice in the choir gallery, instead of accepting their presence as a tribute to their singing.

Uncle Sam's law sharps are right in saying that reversal of the Landis Standard Oil decision has not altered the merits of the case. But, alas, all cases that get into the courts are not finally disposed of on their merits.

While politicians have unquestionably been corrupted by corporations, it is equally unquestionable that corporations have been corrupted by politicians—in other words, corrupt men will always corrupt others, or try to.

And now they are wondering if Mr. Fairbanks meant to be personal when he said: "There are too many who profess decency in politics, but who do not carry their propositions into effect."

Governor Fort, of New Jersey, has received a Black Hand demand for $10,000,000 of his life. And we suspect that's more money than the governor is keeping around the house in the summer.

A study of the world's maritime history will show that those Hollanders, when they got their Dutch up, are capable of going some. History, however, is not one of Castro's specialties.

Whether the Higgen and Graves ticket is to have a quiet or a brass band funeral will depend largely on the extent to which it is financed by Mr. Hearst.

Now that the Tom and John presidential ticket is in the field the lovers of Tom and Jerry are hoping that things will be coming their way about frost-time.

Sam Gompers will be overlooking a profitable sure-thing bet if he neglects to take on a few exorbitant engagements while the advertising is hot.

Japan is making extensive preparations—not for war, but to welcome the United States fleet of battleships.
