A DAUGHTER OF FRANCE.

The heroine of this story is, or was, a real person. She received the French military medal and the decoration of the Legion of Honor in 1878.
One November day in the pleasant land of France a girl stood on the porch looking on the falling leaves which were slowly circling from the trees to the ground. The house before which she stood was the telegraph office, of which her mother, Mme. Dodu, was in charge, the daughter, Juliette, being her assistant. The air was still, and no sound was to be heard except perhaps an occasional strain of song from a distance of those making wine, though there was little of this now, for war had been declared by France against Prussia, the Germans were sweeping across the French border and most of the wine vats had been emptied.
Suddenly there came the clear notes of a distant bugle. The girl's attitude changed at once from idle contemplation to eager interest. She listened and presently heard far up the road a faint clatter of horses' hoofs. Running into the house, she cried:
'Mother, the Prussians are coming!'
'How do you know?'
'Listen.'
They stood for a moment silent, the sounds growing louder every moment.
'Come. We must get everything out of the way that may be of advantage to them.'
They hurriedly gathered all copies of dispatches in the office and pushed them into the stove, where they disappeared in flame and smoke. They had hardly done so when a body of uhlanes dashed up to the house and surrounded it. This is customary in war. When a force takes possession of a town before the main body enters, a troop of cavalry is sent on the gallop to seize the telegraph office. An officer threw himself from his horse and hurried in, placed Mme. Dodu and her daughter under arrest, then looked for any telegrams that might be in the office. Not finding any, he sent the mother upstairs to her bedroom and placed Juliette in her own room on the ground floor.
Now, Juliette had been accustomed to attend to any telegraph work that must be done at night. She had placed a machine in her closet and connected it with the wires in the office. By leaving the closet door open she could hear a call and transmit any message required. Being used to the work, the slightest click would awaken her. She was left alone by her captors, being permitted to close her door, at which a guard was stationed. Meanwhile a Prussian army under Prince Frederick Charles poured into the town and its vicinity.
Juliette went to sleep that night expecting to get a good rest. The Prussians being in possession of the telegraph station and doubtless having their own operators, she would not be called upon to transmit messages. She had barely got to sleep when she was awakened by a clicking in the closet. She recognized it at once as the call of Orleans. The office in another part of the house answered, and the operator at Orleans began to send a message to which Juliette, who could read by ear, listened. It was addressed to Prince Frederick Charles. The Prussians had occupied Orleans and they were sending in the message a description of the exact position of a part of the French army which was marching on Gien. There they gave the information necessary to enable the prince to surround and capture the French.
The fate of that corps of the French army rested with Juliette. It might be possible for her to transmit the dispatch that had been sent the prince to a place the Prussians had not yet entered. But she knew that any tampering with the wires while they were in possession of their own meant death. She was a French girl and loved her people. Getting out of bed, she went to the closet, succeeded in calling the subject of a neighboring town and telegraphed the dispatch with full information as to its being sent to the Prussian commander. He in turn sent it to the French commander. The Prussian movement was anticipated, and the French troops were saved from the trap.
As soon as Prince Frederick Charles learned that his move had been forestalled he suspected a telegram had been sent the French commander informing him of the Prussian intentions. An examination was made of wires leading from the telegraph office, and connecting wires were found leading to Juliette's room.
Juliette was marched out and before a court martial to be tried for her offense. The charge brought against her was that of being a spy, which term includes giving secret information of an army to its enemy. Juliette, who had expected all this, confronted the men who tried her with composure, listening to the formalities without paying any attention to them. She had saved thousands of her country's defenders. What compared with this was the life of a little daughter of France?
As was to be expected, she was convicted and sentenced to be shot.
But no man with the record of Prince Frederick Charles could shoot a little French girl who had outwitted him and offered her life for her countrymen. He not only pardoned her, but commended her bravery.
After the war France was much disturbed and it took time to prosecute those who had done brave deeds. It was not for eight years that Juliette Delder received her cross, though she was given her medal earlier.

ABSOLUTELY FREE TO THE CHURCHES OF THIS CITY

We have been successful in our business through the support of the people of this locality. We know that without this splendid support our present extensive business would not have been possible. It is our desire now to show our appreciation of this support by helping the churches of this city in a financial way.
For the next three or four weeks we are going to set apart one or two days in each week, one of each will be devoted to some church in the city.

OUR PLAN

On each of these days we are going to turn our cash register at the soda fountain over to the women of each individual church, and they will have charge of all of the money taken in at our fountain. At the end of the day, we will present to them 50 per cent of the money taken in (less a part of the running expenses of the store.)
