FRANKLIN UNION IS COMPLETED IN BOSTON

Boston, Mass., Sept. 3.—When Benjamin Franklin died he left a bequest of $5,000 with the provision that the fund, "if accepted by the inhabitants of the Town of Boston," be managed under the direction of the "Selectmen, united with the Minister of one of the oldest Episcopal, Congregational and Presbyterian churches in that Town," who were to make loans under certain conditions, to "young married artificers under the age of twenty-five years." The fund was not to be available under 100 years after Franklin's death.

When the great philosopher-statesman made his bequest, he calculated that the fund would increase in 100 years to $655,000. Of this he provided that $500,000 be then devoted to public uses, and the remaining $155,000 be allowed to accumulate. At the end of 200 years, as he figured, the sum would reach over $20,000,000, of which $15,000,000 was to go to the state and the remainder to the City of Boston.

At the end of 100 years the fund amounted to $391,168.55, which was apportioned pro rata in accordance with the original terms. The Franklin heirs at that time instituted a suit seeking to restrain the proposed disposition of the fund, which after two years was decided against them.

For twenty-five years thereafter, Boston's "Selectmen"—now Aldermen—wrangled over the uses to which the fund should be put. It was finally decided to use the money for the erection, equipment and maintenance of one of the finest trades schools in America. Four years ago, when Franklin's modest $5,000 had grown to $408,396.48, Andrew Carnegie added another $408,396.48.

Today there was thrown open for the inspection of visitors a handsome four-story building just completed at the corner of Berkeley and Appleton streets. It is known as the Franklin Union, the $850,000 trades school which has been added to Boston's educational facilities through the bequest of Benjamin Franklin more than a century ago and the later munificence of Mr. Carnegie.

The purpose of the new institution is to afford an opportunity for the practical training of mechanics, draughtsmen, and stationary engineers, and to fit young men to become skilled and intelligent artisans and workers in whatever trade they undertake. In laying the plans for the institution the foremost trades schools in Germany, France and England were inspected.

The building is a handsome and commodious structure of brick and stone. The basement contains a model boiler room, a steam and hydraulic laboratory designed for the education of stationary engineers; and an automobile laboratory with equipment for experiments in steam, oil and electricity, an electrical laboratory, and a clay modeling room.

On the first floor are grouped the lobby or exhibition room—the letter for the display of industrial material of various kinds—the offices of administration, the library and the large lecture hall, seating nearly 1,000 persons, and designed carefully and scientifically to meet every requirement of proportion, ventilation, acoustics, light and convenience.

Class rooms are distributed throughout the building on every floor, and there are large draughting rooms, studios, laboratories and special lecture rooms for chemistry and physics. The school will be used mainly for evening work, and the finest possible equipment for lighting the class and draughting rooms has been installed.

A Paying Investment

Mr. John White, of 28 Highland avenue, Houlton, Me., says: "Have been troubled with a cough every winter and spring. Last winter I tried many advertised remedies, but the cough continued until I bought a 50-cent bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery. Before that was half gone the cough was all gone. This winter the same happy result has followed; a few doses once more banished the annual cough. I am now convinced that Dr. King's New Discovery is the best of all cough and lung remedies." Sold under guarantee at W. A. Kaykendall's drug store, 50c and $1. Trial bottle free.

COLOR TESTS FOR WARSHIPS OF UNCLE SAM

Boston, Sept. 3.—The famous "white squadron" of the American navy may become a "green squadron" as a result of a series of tests that were commenced this week with the big auxiliary cruiser Yankee off the Massachusetts coast. Early in the week the Yankee left the Charlestown navy yard, where every portion of her exterior had been painted a deep slate green. The cruiser was then sent to sea for a series of tests to determine at what distance she could be discernible in the new color, and how it would act in various sorts of weather.

Later the Yankee will be painted other shades of green and the same experiments will be made. The results of the tests will not be announced until the experiments have been completed, though it is pretty well understood that some one of the shades of green will be selected. The navy department recently decided that the white painted warships were too easily seen at a distance and their identity and power were disclosed as far as the eye or glasses could reach. Acting upon the advice and recommendations of the general war board, of which Admiral Dewey is chairman, it was decided to have a series of practical experiments to absolutely prove the advantages of a more sombre color and to test, by practical methods, the various shades of green paint as a method of hiding a ship's approach. The carrying of the painting scheme to the masts, ventilators and every exposed portion of the ship's exterior above the water line is a new idea.

PLAY CONGRESS TO MEET NEXT WEEK

New York, Sept. 3.—There is every indication that the second play congress of the Playground Association of America, which is to meet in this city next week, will be the most notable gathering of its kind ever held in this or any other country. The purpose of the congress, which is also the annual convention of the association, is to bring together the mayors, park, school and health officers of the cities of the United States, and leading educators and play experts, with the idea of stimulating every city in the country to make adequate playground provisions for its population. In addition to a program by prominent specialists in educational and social work there will be addresses by a number of men prominent in public life, headed by Governor Hughes, of New York, and Bishop William Lawrence, of Boston.
