

We can't tell you how good E-C Corn Flakes are. There aren't any words to just exactly describe their delicious goodness, their dainty crispness.

No other flaked corn food is so tasty, so appetizing, so satisfying. Eat E-C just once and you'll say so, too.

Why eat ordinary corn flakes? E-C costs no more.

OREGON HOP CROP NOT SO LARGE AS LAST YEAR

MANY GROWERS PLOWED THEIR YARDS UP—THERE ARE ABOUT 20,000 ACRES THIS YEAR COMPARED WITH 32,000 ACRES LAST YEAR

In Oregon are growing at the present time about 20,000 acres of hops compared with some 32,000 acres a year ago. In all it is figured now that about 7500 acres were entirely plowed up this year and 4500 acres not cultivated. Of the remaining 20,000 acres it is estimated that 13,000 acres received ordinary culture and that 7000 acres received merely a scratch of the plow here and there.

Under ordinary conditions the hop yards of Oregon will average about four and a half bales to the acre, some not going more than four bales, while others will run five bales or better. In normal years the present acreage would call for a crop of approximately 100,000 bales, but this year the indications are for a less production.

Red Spider Rather Plentiful
While in the list of stations noted red spider is mentioned in but few localities, the fact is that practically all sections show ravages of the insect, while in some sections the damage is quite heavy.

While some growers do not agree with this statement, it looks as if the red spider is the cause of the generally mixed condition of the crop, although the extremely dry season has considerable to do with causing such an effect. Take the crop in most sections and it will be found that but a fraction of the hops on each arm is matured. If picking is started at this time, it will result therefore in the gathering of not only the matured hops, but likewise the green and un-matured crop.

Picking Should Be Delayed
While many pickers are at work in the fields at this time, the delaying of operations would mean much to the quality. While rains might result in mold later on, the gathering of the crop now would cause a large amount of un-matured stock to be put on the market and with the price of best hops below the actual cost of production, it is doubtful if the un-matured stock would pay for the hauling, still less provide funds for the carrying on of the harvest.

Practically a majority of the hop-growers of Oregon are undecided at the moment as to whether they will gather their 1908 crop or not. Much depends upon whether the short sellers can get more bullish news into circulation, thus putting a false aspect upon the market values and thereby forcing the growers to gather an unprofitable crop.

While many growers have sufficient funds to carry on the harvest without calling upon the bankers for loans, most of the growers are not in this position on account of reverses they have met with in late years. It is the failure of these helpless growers which will pull down the total production this year to a considerable extent. Had last year's acreage, with this year's additional acreage, been properly cultivated and gathered this season there is little doubt that Oregon would have come to the front for 1908 with upward of 200,000 bales.

Picking Price Cause of Dissension
The price for picking the 1908 crop is the cause of much dissension among the growers. While a few growers are paying $1 per hundred pounds, most of them are offering but 80 cents, and on this account there is a shortage of pickers to gather even the small crop produced. Thus it will be seen that it is a practical impossibility for any one to correctly estimate the total production of hops for 1908 at this time.

Growers paying 40 cents a box claim that in reality their wages are up to those offering $1 per hundred pounds. They state that there are few boxes that range much over 40 pounds, so taking weight for weight and price for price, those picking by the box are making just as much money as those who are picking by the pound.
