SOCIALIST CANDIDATE FOR PRESIDENT TALKS

the centre of attraction. He was greeted with cheers as he mounted the platform, and began a fifteen minute speech, his voice showing the effects of open-air speaking, but becoming clearer as he proceeded.

Debs is an entertaining, witty speaker, and possesses a pleasing personality. He asserted socialism is opposed mainly because it is not understood, and that much of the alleged information given out concerning its principles is incorrect.

Mr. Debs' Argument.

About the middle of November last year the cry went forth from Wall street: "We have a panic." Suddenly stocks fell, hard cash disappeared, credit vanished, the markets became glutted, factories were closed, and millions of workers found themselves in need of means of subsistence. In the past crises used to come in cycles of about 20 years, ever since the capitalist system reached its full development. Thus we had crises in the country in 1818, 1837, 1857, 1873 and in 1903. According to cycles a crisis would be due about 1913. But there are so many causes and conditions acting on this that it is impossible to foretell exactly when a crisis will be upon us.

There are several causes for an industrial crisis. One is the old explanation which originated with Proudhon. The workmen, under the present conditions, cannot employ themselves, but are dependent upon the will and convenience of some employer--the owner of a shop or factory who owns the tools and raw material. And not for love, nor for Christian charity, does the employer--the owner of the tools and raw material--give the laborers employment. He does so to invest capital, and to make a profit. The capitalist system--the wage system--is based upon the employer making a profit out of the work of the employees. As a matter of fact, the employer cannot pay the workman the full value of his product. The employer must make a profit if his business or his factory is to continue.

Thus the workmen of the country, not getting back in wages the full value of the production of this country, cannot buy back that production. The capitalist class, that is, the employing class, is too small in number to use up the difference, because with the aid of machinery production has greatly increased.

The surplus has to look for foreign markets. But conditions are the same in every civilized country--all nations look for foreign markets. Everywhere we find that the producing class of the country cannot buy back the production of the country with the money it gets for that production. Therefore the competition for the world market is very keen, and when there is any trouble about it and the "foreign market" gets clogged up, we have an industrial crisis. In other words we have a forced under consumption of the workers. And this forced under consumption of the worker brings about the so-called over-production, which is inherent in the capitalist system, because no matter how much or how little the toilers of a nation produce, they produce more than they can buy back with the wages they receive. And in this way the so-called crises originate. At such times the trade and manufacturing of a nation come to a standstill, because "there is too much on hand." Factories, workshops and mines close because we have "too much." There are still millions of people who never had enough, but that makes no difference, because these people cannot buy.

The Republicans, he says, charge the Democrats with responsibility for the panic of 1893, and were voted into power by the workmen who believed what they told them at that time.

In 1900 the Republican slogan was "Let well enough alone."

In 1904 it was "stand pat."

In 1908 it is "God knows." (Applause.)

If the panic of 1893 was a Democratic panic, then that of 1907 was a Republican panic, when 5,000,000 workmen lost their jobs. Both of the old parties were wrong because they stood for an old, decaying system of competition that bred competition and monopoly. There are 30,000,000 workers in this country, but they have no tools. In the days of our grandfathers the workers owned their own tools and received the benefit of their toil. Today the tools are all owned by the great corporations of the East and Rockefeller is thus enabled to make $5,000,000 a month.

"A socialist system," he said, "is the real basis of this country, and the workers want to work for their own tools and get back the benefit of their work they do. That is the condition of Wall street, representing the big capitalists, and Bryan of the small capitalists, who are always taken care of in due time by the big fellows."

"I am the candidate of the workmen, and don't expect the votes of any capitalists. And if the workmen will stand by me as solidly as Wall street stands by Taft, I will be in a position to invite you to my inauguration next March." (Applause.)

Mr. Debs appealed to the workmen to think and read; to use their heads more and hands less.

"Why, a great many of you workmen ought to be afraid to look your hands in the face," he shouted while the crowd laughed. "When the men who own the tools, the big mills and industries want help they advertise for so many 'hands.' If they wanted heads they would say so, of course."

In closing Mr. Debs painted an eloquent oratorical picture of the future, when socialism should rule the country, giving lucrative employment to all, with time for recreation and study; when the prisons and asylums should be emptied and the child labor dungeons emptied and their 4,000,000 occupants turned out into the playgrounds and the schools.

Collecting Funds.
 At 11:05 o'clock the "Red Special" pulled out, but not until Mr. Debs had shaken the hands of numerous comrades of the party, who crowded around him as he tried to make his way from the platform to his car. He greeted every one in a genial and cordial manner, and took particular notice of children.

Before and during the speaking the attaches of the party went among the crowd selling socialist literature and it was announced from the platform that offerings would be accepted for the fund to keep the train on its way through the country. A goodly sum was collected, one man contributing $5.

What Debs Says.

In an interview Eugene V. Debs says: "There is a new spirit abroad. It is expressed in the rising movement of the people. The people are tired of the old struggle and of the old strife. They are a-hungered and thirsting for the gospel of the coming day. Such a crusade as this the world has never known. Men, women and children are consecrating themselves with a religious fervor, and with an enthusiasm that is irresistible. The meetings we are holding are not like the conventional political gatherings, harangued by the old politicians in the biennial or quadrennial battle for spoils. The politics of the future is to be based upon sound morality, and there is to be conscience in it. This politics is the kind the Red Special is introducing to the people, and its warm reception everywhere has sufficiently proved that they are prepared to receive it. The wonderful spread of Socialist sentiment pre-figures the early triumph of the Socialist movement."
