PORTLAND MARKET REPORT

Salem, Sept. 24.—The prune harvest in the Willamette Valley became general this week though many growers began picking and drying their fruit last week. The opening of the harvest season for prunes is about ten days earlier this year than usual, due, it is supposed, to the lateness of the Spring.

Reports from growers who have already dried some fruit are that the quality will be first-class and the sizes large, though the quantity, as expected, will be small, owing to the fact that the fruit did not "set" well in the Spring. The present fair weather is very favorable for prune drying and it seems probable that the entire crop will be saved without injury. In this section of the state the prune market is inactive at present, neither growers nor packers showing any desire to do business.

Conditions in the Eastern prune market are reported in the New York Commercial of September 17 as follows:

The strong tone in prunes, large sizes, continues the feature. There is noted also a more active demand locally and while buyers are taking stock in a small way, the wants of the buyers generally are on a steadily increasing scale. A good deal of business in jobbing lots has been done at full outside figures on full count strictly grade Santa Claras. The packers on the coast are not inclined to sell 30s and 40s even at the high premium quoted over the 50s and 90s. Wires yesterday in most cases quoted at 4½ to 4 3-8c four-size bag basis on 50-90 inclusive. Outside prunes were held on a 3¾ to 4c four-size bag basis, f. o. b., coast, all October shipment. Old prunes on the spot are held on a 8½c four-size coast bag basis. There is no urging of sales. Spot Oregon prunes are quite freely offered as quoted. There is no easier tone noted on the Coast.

Big Fight in Cream Market.

While for a time it was believed that the organization of local creamery men into an association, having for its object the betterment of cream quality, would be able to accomplish its object, the situation is growing worse every day. The fight for cream is fiercer than ever, and this has forced the makers of butter to take any sort of quality offered if they did not want to lose the shipper.

At present some makers are paying as high a price per pound for cream as they are receiving for butter—today 24 cents a pound. Some creameries are not getting this value for their butter, but in order to keep their shippers they are forced to pay the highest market price for the cream. While some interests are still quoting cream at 1½c a pound less than the highest price for butter, others are paying within 1c a pound of the top, while still others are paying the top price itself.

Put Butter Higher Again.

Two local creameries advanced their quotations on butter 2½c a pound, going the rest of the makers who advanced 1c yesterday, one better. Three makers altogether are now quoting 34c a pound for the best product. One of these which advanced its quotations to the high figure several days ago, is now considering a further advance, and it is likely that the price will therefore be moved to 35c a pound. A year ago today the price of butter stood at 35c a pound or 1c higher than the highest quotations ruling today. This high price ruled last year until October 1, when it dropped back to 32½c. Then, again, on December 2, it went back to 35c and on the thirteenth day of the same month touched the high market price of the season—37½c—for the second time.

Egg Prices Are Mixed.

Values in the local egg market are somewhat mixed. The small arrivals of local ranch enable the trade to put values to almost any figure, but several handlers say they are unable to secure above 28c for their stock, while others talk of 25@26c. The present strained situation is due entirely to the heavy purchases of eastern eggs by commission men. These eggs were purchased at very low prices and whenever the prices of local eggs can be sent higher, it adds that much to the value of eastern stock. Even though the commission handlers of local eggs paid their shippers more money than they are actually receiving for the eggs—because they secured very scant supplies at this time—they would still be making more money, because of the high profits on the eastern goods.

Poultry Prices on a Fence.

Values in the poultry market are being moved higher almost every day, but buyers do not take kindly to this treatment and are holding off their purchases as much as possible. While receipts of poultry are somewhat heavier, the trade is able to secure the price quoted by the papers without the least trouble, but one or two receivers are said to be quoting a still higher figure, but not receiving it.

Receipts of turkeys are increasing somewhat—in fact, the arrivals today were greater than for any week recently. Demand is quite fair at the price, but the market would not stand heavy arrivals and maintain high values. It is stated that Mr. Mefioldrick of Vancouver, who has the government's Philippine order for turkeys, has "farmed" out his order among the various buyers, and they are at present scouring the country for supplies.

The Hop Market

Hop dealers ascribe he inactivity of the market to the desire of the Eastern trade to see new-crop of Oregon samples before they place their orders. Samples are going forward freely and their fine quality should soon produce definite results. Another thing that may be tending to hold back Eastern orders at this time is the low offers that certain Coast dealers are making to the Eastern trade, some of them at 9 cents delivered.

The purchase of 455 bales of O. Weidner &Co., on the West side at 6½ and 7 cents is reported. The hops were bought in the bin and baled. Klaber, Wolf & Netter yesterday received the following cable from their Lonodon office:

"Harvest now about finished. Estimate of crop 520,000 cwt. Market continues very quiet. Nuremburg market is expected to decline, inferior quality."

Want Oregon Apples.

The Dalles, Or., Sept. 23.—There is a great demand for Oregon apples in New York and in the East generally," said C. A. Buckley, a stock and fruitgrower, who has returned to his home in Sherman County, after a month's visit in the East.

Mr. Buckley says that while New York was once a greaet apple state, it is not that now.; that people there demand Oregon apples.

"Some people say high prices for Oregon apples cannot always be expected," said Mr. Bunckley, "but after visiting the East I know this to be nonsense. The country is gradually becoming dependent upon the West for many products, apples in particular and prices are going to advance, not fall."

Brief Notes of Front Street.

A car of sweet potatoes and a car of grapes were among the arrivals by mail this morning.

While cabbage supplies are somewhat better the market is firm at $2@2.25.

Peach supplies are somewhat better cleaned up and for good stock the price is being maintained around 60 and 75c.

Polor apples are still checking the market and prices are unsatisfactory.

Fresh prunes are in large supply. Prices rule between 40c@50c a crate of four baskets.

Strawberries from local points came in this morning and found a demand around 20c.

All is quiet in the hop market, with dealers awaiting samples before starting a buying movement.

Chittim bark is steady to strong, with prices maintained and demand unchanged from last week. Those who want to sell at quoted figures are finding no difficulty in doing so.

Portland Livestock Market.

There is no material change in livestock conditions in the local market yesterday. Receipts were not heavy. There was a firm demand for choice offerings of all descriptions, but inferior stock showed the usual dragging tendency. There is still an accumulation of such stock, which it is exceedingly difficult to dispose of at any rate.
