HARRIMAN BUILDS DOWN-GRADE LINE
Wallowa Extension Part of Water Haul to Portland Along Snake River

Behind the invitation of the citizens of Enterprise to the general officers of the Harriman lines to attend a banquet in honor of the completion and dedication of the road to Wallowa tomorrow lies a story of quiet railroad building that would dazzle even Jim. While Hill has been constructing the North bank road and thus attaining an easy grade to the Pacific, the Harriman people have, at the same time, and unknown to the public, been getting a water grade to Portland, and they will be in a position, when their lines are completed, to handle the "down-the-Columbia" traffic just as easily as the Hill line will. They will have a down-grade route to the city.
 The lines of the Harriman system which will form a part of the "down-grade" route have been under construction for some time, and it is understood that work upon them will be continued throughout the winter wherever possible.

More Than Was Made Known.
 To the public these lines have been known as the Wallowa & Snake River extensions. On paper they appeared to be an outlet only for local traffic. The Wallowa extension meant simply the displacing of the railroad of the stage line to Enterprise, the principal city in the county. Of course, the company would continue the line to Joseph, as a temporary terminus. There construction might stop. No promises were made. The Snake River line was moving ahead from Huntington north. Its terminus was supposed to be Homestead, the nearest outlet on the Oregon side for the product of the copper mines in the Seven Devils district in Idaho. The supposition was easy of belief. A great number of claims have been staked in the district, many are working and a smelter is in operation. Nothing is so thought as more reasonable than to believe that the Harriman company was building a freight line for the transportation of copper.

 But Harriman was really doing no such thing. He was and is, according to the most authentic information, building the Snake River line from Huntington to a connection at Lewiston and thus getting the benefit of the down-river grade to Portland, giving him an opportunity to compete with the North Bank road on equal terms. The Joseph terminal is an illusion to the people of Joseph. The line will run right through that town to a connection with the Snake River line at a point northeast of Homestead. It will, when completed, be equipped for both freight and passenger service, but indications are that on through service only freight will be handled.
 Over the new road the grade will be practically level. Leaving from the point near Homestead, the trains will pass by way of Joseph and Enterprise into La Grande, and thus avoid the unnecessary climb of the Blue mountains. The road will be longer but the handling of freight there will be no change in the system. The line from Huntington to La Grande, although having heavy grades, is the shortest route for passenger service.

IRVING FARMERS ARE VERY BUSY

(Special Correspondence).
 Irving, Ore., Nov. 11.—The farmers have been making good use of the fine weather conditions prevailing during the last few days, and are making much progress with their fall seeding, the soil being in splendid condition, and good crops are insured.
 The fruit inspector has been visiting the orchardists in this vicinity and insists that they shall prune and spray their fruit trees at once.
 The Irving Grange is preparing an entertainment for some time in the near future, and a general good time is expected, as the grangers never do things by halves.
 The Eugene Mill & Elevator Co. have several men and teams engaged in hauling wheat from here to their mills at Eugene.
 J. W. Zumwalt has returned with his family from his riverside farm, where they have spent the summer, to their home in Irving, to spend the winter months.
 The S. P. Co. have closed the office at this place against the south bound Cottage Grove local, and the public are subject to much inconvenience, as a large number of people have been in the habit of using this train.
 J. W. Hilton and J. H. Williams expect to start out in a few days with a shooting gallery outfit. We wish them success.
