ANNUAL RECEPTION AT NATION'S WHITE HOUSE

Washington, D. C., Jan. 1.—In accordance with time-honored tradition President Roosevelt held the customary New Year's reception at the White House today. Under the present administration these receptions have always been unusually brilliant and today's event, perhaps because it was President Roosevelt's last function of that kind, surpassed in brilliancy and large attendance even that of last year, which held the record in both respects.

The grounds surrounding the White House had been put in perfect condition during the past few days and the White House, especially the rooms to be used for the reception, had been decorated with unprecedented magnificence. Plants and flowers from the greenhouses had been grouped in the different halls, rooms and corridors with exquisite taste to form an artistic background for the gorgeous uniforms and court dresses of the diplomats and attending representatives of the army and navy.

Within certain restrictions the receptions at the White House on New Year's day are free to all and every year thousands avail themselves of this opportunity to pay their respects to the President, and incidentally to gratify their curiosity. But never had there been greater numbers of those craving admission to the White House than today. The lines in the grounds began to form long before nine o'clock, while the beginning of the reception had been set as usual for 11 o'clock.

Before the opening of the public reception President and Mrs. Roosevelt, assisted by Mrs. Nicholas Longworth and Miss Ethel Roosevelt, who have made her social debut only a few days ago, received the members of the Cabinet and their ladies. The President, attired in the regulation frock suit, with turndown collar and a dark tie, seemed to be in excellent humor and chatted gaily with the members of his official family, while Mrs. Roosevelt, in a handsome reception gown, made the honors of the occasion to the wives and daughters of her cabinet ministers. Vice-President Fairbanks and Mrs. Fairbanks headed the Cabinet party and were followed in order by Secretary and Mrs. Root and the other members of the Cabinet and their ladies. A few minutes before 11 o'clock a trumpet fanfare heralded the beginning of the reception. The Marine band, hidden in the corridor, behind a screen of ferns and palms, struck up an inspiring march and the receiving party, headed by President and Mrs. Roosevelt, descended the stairs from the upper floor, crossed the corridor and entered the Blue parlor, where the reception was to be held.

President and Mrs. Roosevelt took their position near the door leading from the Red Room to the Blue Parlor and the other members of the receiving party, in the order of their official rank, arranged themselves alongside, forming a semi-circle in the south end of the room. Around the doorway through which the visitors were to enter, secret service men hovered, who kept their eyes upon the guests as they passed through the door. Nobody was permitted to carry a handbag or other articles and nobody was permitted to pass along the line with his needs in his pockets.

Shortly at eleven o'clock the doors of the Red Room were thrown open and the foreign ambassadors, and their ladies, accompanied by their ladies, began to file into the Blue Parlor, where they were cordially greeted by the President and formally introduced, to the other members of the receiving party. First came the dean of the diplomatic corps, His Excellency, the Russian minister, accompanied by his wife, and followed by the other foreign ambassadors, accompanied by their ladies. The ambassador personally introduced the members of his staff, all of whom were resident in their diplomatic or military uniforms. Next in order came the Ambassador from France and Mrs. Jasseraud and after them the other foreign ambassadors, according to their "anciennete." There were but few changes in the personnel of the ambassadorial party. Germany was represented by Count Jo-

REVIVAL MEETINGS ARE GATHERING POWER

Good Service Again Last Night Boys' and Girls' Choir Was Feature

The revival meetings at the Central Presbyterian church is gathering power as it goes on. Last night Mr. Jones spoke from the text, "For there was no room for him in the inn." The text referring to the birth of Christ, who was cradled in a manger, because there was no room in the caravansary for Him. He illustrated with numerous apt anecdotes how men today crowd Jesus Christ out of their thoughts and out of their homes and made a fervid appeal to young people especially to give Christ a place in all their lives. Prof. Spear sang a beautiful solo following the sermon. One of the pleasing features was the singing by a boys' and girls' choir located in the North Balcony. At the conclusion of each service, Prof. Spear conducts a choir rehearsal during which large numbers improve the opportunity of remaining and hearing the music and singing together in a delightful fellowship.

After the regular services were ended Mr. Spear held a meeting in which he narrated the story of many hymns which they sang. Rev. Mount then took charge of an extensive meeting, after which Evangelist Jones closed the meeting with a Thanksgiving and praise service, ending with the singing of the New Year. The large company that remained for the night, which included many who were invited to the services, were finally concluded. Service again this evening at 7:30. Everyone is invited.

hann Heinrich von Bernstorff, the successor of Baron Speck von Sternburg. He was accompanied by his wife, an American woman. China was again represented by Wu Ting Fang, who was accompanied by a gorgeously arrayed staff. After the ambassadors came the ministers and minor diplomatic representatives, among them Count Molke, the newly appointed minister from Denmark and his charming wife and the new Swedish minister, de Lagercrantz and his wife. The members of the diplomatic corps were later entertained at breakfast by Secretary and Mrs. Root.
