The CRESCENT

FOR THE WOMAN AND HOME

A stone jar with a close cover is one of the safest things to keep matches in. Place on a high shelf out of the reach of the children.

A day should be selected to look after all odds and ends of work which have been left undone. It is a great relief to feel that all the things are done.

Keep a bowl of oatmeal on the washstand, and after washing the hands, dry them in the meal. The skin will be kept white and smooth and less liable to chaps by this process.

When not in use a parasol should be kept in a canvas bag with a drawstring, by which it should be hung. In this way it will keep much better than when laid away or wrapped in a tightly fitting cover.

Colored-bordered towels and table linen should not be washed nor boiled with a strong alkaline soap nor with any of the washing powders or compounds in the market. All these substances start the colors.

Kid gloves last ever so much longer if the wrinkles are carefully smoothed out and they are properly filled and laid in a long box each time after they have been worn. It is a very little trouble and soon becomes a habit.

The best cleaner for sponges is a strong solution of borax, in the proportion of a tablespoonful to a pint of hot water. It will not only thoroughly cleanse the sponge, but disinfect it, destroying all germs and parasites.

To clean cashmere wash the material in warm soap suds in which a little borax has been previously dissolved. Rinse in very deep blue water and iron while still damp. If carefully done the material should look just like new.

Persons who are suffering with perishing feet will find great relief if they wash the feet every night with warm vinegar and water for several minutes at a time. Then dust the feet with a powder of one part salicylic acid to eight of talcum.

Have plenty of towels and of good size. Nothing is more aggravating than a small bit of a towel that is wet before one side of the face is wiped dry. Turkish towels are excellent and are much liked by some for toilet purposes as well as for bath towels.

To sweeten a musty cask throw in burning coals, and then cold water. The brewers wash their casks with a mixture of lime and water nearly of the consistency of ordinary paint. This mixture is allowed to remain until nearly dry, when it is washed out well with water.

Sachets to lay among the contents of a bureau drawer may be made by filling small muslin bags with a mixture made by pounding to a fine powder one ounce each of caraway seed, cloves, mace, nutmeg, cinnamon and Tonquin beans, adding powderedorris root sufficient to equal the weight of the other ingredients.

It is worth while to remember that the shine on the elbows and shoulders of a gown can be removed by gentle friction with emery cloth. Rub just enough to raise a little nap and then, in the case of cashmere or other smooth materials, go over the place a few times with a warmed silk handkerchief.

To hang window curtains make the curtains the desired length, but do not cut them. Run a row of stitching an inch and a half or two inches below the fold, and make another row far enough below to admit the pole. Then fold what length there is left over and tack it behind the hanging. This method of hanging is in general use, rings not being in favor just now.

to play havoc with the frock worn every day. Lingerie blouses and their comfortable separate waists of all kinds will be used during the coming season just as they have been used in former seasons but the chic street frock will be a one-piece model with coat to match.

Such costumes, when designed for hot weather, naturally call for thin and cool materials. For the early spring very light-weight cloths, broadcloth, satin cloth, fine serge, Henrietta, etc., are used, while for the more advanced season various kinds of Pongees and the endless variety of handsome and attractive silk materials now offered in the shops will be employed.

Among the numerous styles of crepes offered for summer wear is a new kind with an odd gasket-like weave which is particularly handsome. It promises to become popular. Crepe-ena is another novelty—a satin-lustre crepe cloth of exquisite suppleness. Then there is peau-de-crepe, a washable silk somewhat like a heavy India silk in appearance.

Among the good things that have come and will stay, quickly working their way into the favor of good dressers, are the beautiful Ottoman royale and Ottoman reines. The first are of the Tussah royal family, crepe in effect and bearing cords across the surface to accentuate a novel thought and mark the appreciation for repped goods.

The variety of colors and shades of colors that may be found in nearly all materials at this time is astounding and fairly bewildering. At the first glance it would seem absurd to speak of one particular color or that of color as particularly favored, but, after all, there can be no doubt that preference is given to some colors or shades. Indications point to a soft, light violet color as the dominant one for spring. One sees it on the new embroideries, in the flowered silks and mousselines, in the bordered dimities and in the soft silks and plumes. The French dressmakers say, on the other hand, that the dull brick tone, which was called Egyptian red during the winter, will be used as the lustra color. The new color will, however, differ just a trifle in tone from the one which has been in use during the season just ended.

An exceedingly pretty and comfortable looking article of apparel is the over-blouse. The lining, which may be used as a gilette, can be made with high or square neck, and full or three-quarter one-sleeved sleeves. These gilettes and sleeves may be made of soft, sheer material and trimmed abundantly with lace and tucks of all-over embroidery or lace. The entire waist is of a style that looks the better for such trimming, and one need not be afraid of overdoing things in this design as in some others.

The over-blouse is much ornamented. The low square neck and the short sleeves are finished with gait or insertion, and tucks run from the yoke to the waist line, front and back, in groups of five; also from shoulder to waist, back and front, in clusters of three. The sleeves are so tucked. This waist may be worn separately or attached to a skirt in semi-princess style.

For those who intend to go to the South before the beginning of the warm weather a charming new parasol is offered, called the Cio Gio San. The shape and design are copied straight from the paper parasol used by the Japanese. The new parasol is quite flat, with a gilded framework, and covered with flowered silk and a wide hem of colored chiffon. The eighteen ribs of the parasol are also gilded and a large ring is slipped over the folded parasol to hold it together.

Since milliners have been using metal in such small quantities, they are now shown also in pastel colors, as well as in gold and silver. They are being employed for entire hat draperies, for brim facings, for ornaments in the form of buckles, embroidered bands. Dressmakers, too, are using these metallic fabrics to a great extent for costumes where the transparent yokes are lined with gold or silver.

For day wear amethysts are undoubtedly the fashion. There are sets of these, hat-pins, long watch-chain and brooch to match. In most of the hat-pins the stone is elongated or spherical.

Since the fad for decoration has become so widespread, the girl with a talent for fashioning flowers and bowknots with her needle is decorating the fronts of her hosiery from toes to ankle with quaint embroidered designs.

At the millinery shops the trimmings of the moment are ostrich tips in mixed shades, mauve and old blue, black and mauve, and green and navy blue.

The tips of satin shoes are embroidered with jet beads, pearls or gold and silver thread; the heels are high and the buckle is jewelled.

One of the new French toques is called the "Marie Antoinette" and is made of soft straw or shirred liberty satin.

Some of the new skirts have five, seven or nine gores, with panels set in the side seams.

LIFE GUARDS

The Life Guards are two regiments of cavalry forming part of the British household troops. They are gallant soldiers, and every loyal British heart is proud of them. Not only the king's household, but yours, ours, everybody's, should have its life guards. The need of them is especially great when the greatest foes of life, diseases, find allies in the very elements, as colds, influenza, catarrh, the grip, and pneumonia do in the stormy month of March. The best way we know of to guard against these diseases is to strengthen the system with Hood's Sarsaparilla—the greatest of all life guards. It removes the conditions in which these diseases make their most successful attack, gives vigor and tone to all the vital organs and functions, and imparts a genial warmth to the blood. Remember, the weaker the system the greater the exposure to disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the system strong.

JUMPER DRESS FOR SCHOOL

Whether children wear wash frocks of gingham, chambray or woolen ones of challis, albatross or Henrietta, the jumper dress is still popular. The design illustrated has the panel at the back of the waist, which carries out the prevailing long, straight lines, and the tucks on either side break the look across the front and back. Stitched trimming bands of self are still popular for children's clothes. Doubtless this is due to the
