HOLDS-UP MRS. WM. HENSHAW

der and did not look like a tramp at all. He wore a blue coat, light trousers and a light soft hat. I would certainly know him if I ever saw him again. I do not know why he should want to do me injury. It is probable that he has seen me drive out that way a number of times recently, as that is my favorite drive, and has probably noticed the jewels I usually wear, hoping to rob me of them. You can say that the holdup did not excite me much. It is the loss of my horse that agitates me."

Horse Will Die

Dr. Weller was called to attend the horse's injury. He found that the bullet from the pistol severed an artery in the breast, and that there could be no possibility of saving its life, as the animal was bleeding to death internally. The animal was brought to the Renshaw barn. It was a very valuable horse and when asked its value, Mr. Renshaw declared that money could not have bought it.
